A GENEROUS OFFER

George B. Wright Discovers a Cure for Lost Manhood and Sends It Free to Every Sufferer Who Will Write for it.

Gratitude is one of the noblest impulses of the human heart and in few instances has this fine quality been so conspicuously exemplified as in the case of George B. Wright of Marshall.

Mr. Wright is a merchant and well known citizen of Marshall, Mich., who was permanently cured of lost manhood and nervous debility after declining health for years. He now devotes his life to helping other men who suffer as he once suffered. Mr. Wright offers to send the medical prescription that effected a cure in his case to every reader of COMFORT who is suffering to-day as he suffered. All who will drop him a letter asking for a copy of the prescription will receive it by return mail free of charge.

The following editorial by A. N. Tally, M. D., regarding Mr. Wright's prescription for lost manhood appeared in the December issue of the United States Health Reports, published at Washington, D. C.

We, as the highest American authority on all matters of health, sanitation and hygiene, are constantly, receiving letters of inquiry about a reliable cure for lost strength in men.

Therefore we have ordered an investigation to be made into the subject and our medical staff found there were many so-called cures on the market, but that many were worthless and some actually harmful. Therefore when we came upon the prescription furnished free by George B. Wright, a merchant of Marshall, Mich., we instituted a most thorough laboratory examination and found that its wonderful efficacy depended upon its being exactly compounded according to proper chemical requirements, in order to establish the proper chemical actions and reactions in the human system, and that it should especially, and above all, contain each and every ingredient named in the prescription, otherwise it would be quite inactive and worthless.

Properly mixed and containing everything called for in the prescription, its effect upon the nerve centers is truly wonderful and its nerve tonic properties easily surpassed all ordinary methods of medication.

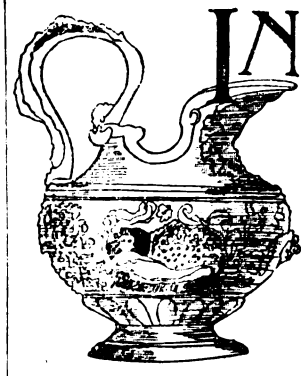
Among the benefactors of the race may be mentioned the said George B. Wright, inasmuch that he gives this grand discovery free to all who write for it.

Taken according to directions it builds up the weak and restores to full size and vigor the nerve muscles. It brings hope and cheer and lifts up the discouraged man so that he once more enjoys the beauties of nature and the pleasures of life. Failure in business and love surely falls upon him who is weakened physically and mentally, and this sad condition is at once relieved and a new man made of him who uses this prescription.

Therefore, upon the highly favorable report of our medical staff we extend to George B. Wright's prescription for lost manhood the full editorial and official indorsement of the United States health reports. As certain as wound leaves a scar, and as sure as effect follows cause, do men live to repent their follies and indiscretions in weakness and suffering. The tortured sufferer may bear no telltale marks of ruin upon his face to betray his lost manhood. He goes to his grave a human wreck, and never tells of his sufferings for fear of shame. Such mental anguish at times drives him to the verge of desperation, and he is easy prey for those vultures in human form—quack doctors—who hold out alluring hopes of cure only to disappoint, and after robbing him of his money, plunge him into absolute despair.

No one can appreciate the horrors of lost manhood except he who has suffered them. No one can help such sufferers except he who knows a cure and has himself been restored to full manhood. A notable cure of lost manhood in an extreme case was effected in the person of George B. Wright, a music dealer and well known citizen of Marshall, Mich. Mr. Wright for years suffered the agony of lost vital power. He saw his physical power go from him as the result of insidious disease, until he was reduced to a condition of senility, and the best doctors in the country gave him up to die.

Like many others, he tried the various remedies offered by specialists for the treatment of weaknesses peculiar to men, and it was this experience that drove him to a little study and research for his own benefit.



He asserts that his ten years' suffering, both mentally and physically, was turned to unbounded joy in a single night through a rare combination of medicines that literally made him young again. It is the prescription of this discovery that his enthusiasm leads him to offer free to any man, young or old, who feels that his animation or the fire of ambition has left him and needs something that will brace him up and enable him to be prepared for any undertaking which may present itself.

There is no question but what in his individual case the results were just as described, and it seems quite probable that any man who believes himself to be weak may profit by sending for this free prescription. Many people wonder how he can afford to send this prescription free, but it costs him little to do so and he feels a philanthropic interest in giving weak men an opportunity to cure themselves.

A request to G. B. Wright, music dealer, Box No. 736 Marshall, Mich., for his free prescription, will be promptly and privately complied with by return mail.

FAMOUS VASES OF THE WORLD.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

IN TAKING up this delightful branch of art we find that pottery is its own historian, and presents in its charming pictorial fashion the domestic, social, and religious customs of all savage and civilized nations on the globe. And not only history, but biography is linked with it, and brings before us many distinguished people as patrons, collectors, and the accomplished potters themselves.

These papers will deal more particularly with some of the world renowned vases which are closely associated with important use or events.

The famous Alhambra vase takes its name from the fortress-palace in Grenada, Spain, which was the royal abode of the Moorish kings, who were surrounded with the splendors and refinements of Asiatic luxury.

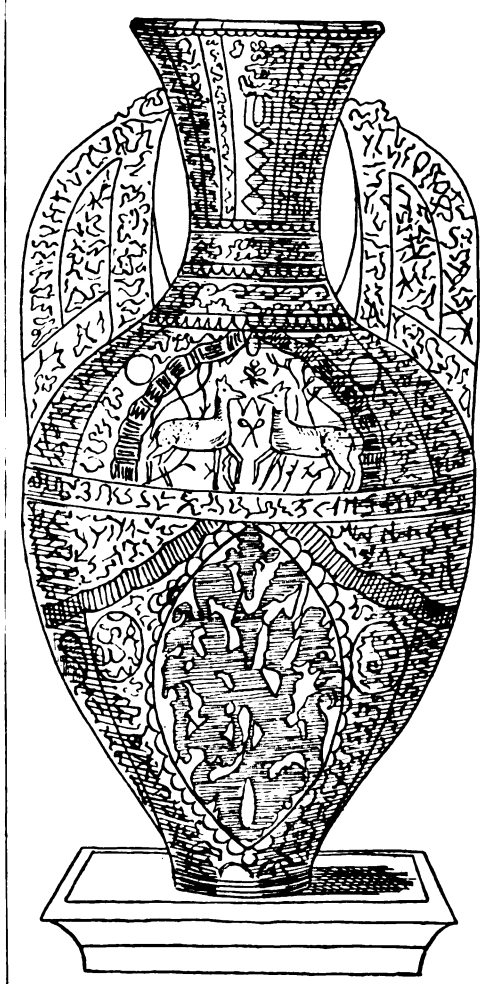
It was there where they made their last stand for empire in Spain. After Spain passed into the hands of Christians the Alhambra palace was occasionally occupied by the Castilian monarchs whose sojourn was transient, and after their departure it again became desolate. The desertion of the Court was a fatal blow to the Alhambra, and a horde of smugglers, thieves, and rogues of all sorts took up their abode in it. But when Grenada fell into the hands of the French, the Alhambra was garrisoned by their troops. The Spain of today can thank her invaders for having preserved to her this most beautiful and interesting palatial monument.

Alhamar, the first of the Moslem kings, who built the fortress-palace in 1273, was a reputed magician, because his enterprises were so quickly and successfully achieved.

His brilliant kingdom will ever be famous in history and romance. In a silver casket his remains were placed in a sarcophagus of precious marble in the Alhambra.

His motto was, "there is no conqueror but God," and through all the generations of his descendants it still appears at the present time emblazoned on the escutcheon in the halls of the palace.

There is no theme among the common people of Spain more prevalent and popular than that of treasures once buried by the Moors.



Any Spanish Mulctur will suspend smoking his cigarrillo to tell some tale of Moslem gold buried beneath a Moorish Notchtown. These traditions have been handed down from generation to generation among the poor people of the neighborhood. Nor were there always jobles; for during the wars between Moor and Christian which distracted the country for centuries, castles frequently and suddenly changed owners; and during sieges the inhabitants buried their money and jewels in the earth, or hid them in vaults, and wells.

The Alhambra palace, of course, from the peculiar circumstances of its history, has been a fertile source for popular fiction of this kind.

At the time of the expulsion of the Moors from Spain, many of them concealed their most precious effects, hoping that their exile would be but temporary, and that they would be enabled to return and retrieve their treasures at some future day.

It is very true, that hoards of gold and silver coin have been accidentally found among the Moorish fortresses, and the few facts have given creation for a thousand fictions.

In the ceramic art, or the art of making

THE ALHAMBRA VASE.

pottery we find no relics of this work done before the building of the Alhambra. We find among their most celebrated pieces the Alhambra Vase, so called from having been found beneath one of the pavements within the courts of the fortress-palace. It is four feet high and was made in 1320, and is composed of fine white earthernware decorated in two shades of blue combined with a copper lustre. It was copied at the Sevres pottery in France in 1842, and one of the reproductions now stands in the drawing-room of the Windsor Hotel at Saratoga Springs, and is probably the only one in America.

This famous vase, when discovered, was filled with coins and jewels, and it is supposed that it was hidden there when the Moors were driven from Spain. In this exquisite vase we find the gem of an industry, which once planted on enlightened Christian soil, grew to its present magnificent proportions. Christianity, while it forgot them, absorbed their fate. Why the Christian world should become fascinated with the characteristic arts of the worst enemies of Christendom is a question. But history is full of instances of nations accepting the tastes of nations they have conquered. The European Crusaders, the army of the Cross, quickly absorbed the ideas of Eastern decoration, and transmitted them to the European artists of the midde ages.

The Alhambra vase bears evidence of great skill and tarte, and is not only a master-piece in ceramic art, but is a magnificent example of the decorative genius of the Moors.

To-day nearly all vases from Spain present Moorish forms, and yet they are inferior to the achievements of the Moors. The Moors achieved a series of successes seldom granted to a people not given to united effort. Little remains of their wandering history except those splendid structures to be seen in Cordova, Grenada, and Seville.

In Moorish art we miss one feature which is so interesting in Egyptian ornament; that of symbolism which the religion of the Moors forbade. They confined themselves to geometrical combinations and the ever graceful arabesque. During the five or six centuries in which the Moors held possession of the finest parts of Spain, it enjoyed a greater measure of prosperity than ever before. The original vase now stands in a small room leading into the Lion's Court, and is an object of great beauty and interest to those who visit the Alhambra.

The Barberini or Portland Vase, this vase as being one of the most celebrated, beautiful, and valuable in existence deserves our attention. Among its compeers it retains an imperial eminence, and asserts the superior standard of ceramic art which was attained in its own unknown era.

It was discovered in a cemetery, the Monte-del-Grano, a few miles out of Rome, in the sixteenth century, where it had been placed in a sarcophagus. By the order of Pope Barberini, named Urban VIII. it was removed to the Barberini palace in Rome where it remained for a century. It is thought that it was placed in the tomb about the year 235 after Christ.

It contained ashes, which were supposed to be those of the Emperor Alexander Severus and his mother Julia Mammaca, both of whom were assassinated in the year of 235, during the revolt in Germany. There has been much speculation as to its composition, but connoisseurs have come to the conclusion that it is made of two layers of a substance resembling opaque glass, and may have been produced in the glassworks at Alexandria in their best period. The groundwork is very dark blue, almost black, and the ornamentation is of another strata, or layer of white, cut like cameo which makes it a very beautiful work of art.

The cameo decorations, which are brought out in fine relief, are thought to represent certain ceremonies connected with the Eleusinian mysteries, or Greek festivals in honor of Ceres.

There the compartments or decorations. The first is emblematical of moral life and expressed by a Libertina seated upon ruins beneath a deciduous tree, or one losing its leaves. She holds an inverted torch, and two companions with her seem to express the terror with which humor brings gaze upon death.

The second view is immortal life represented by a hero entering the gate of Elysium, conducted by Divine Love, and received by Immortality, who is to present him to Pluto, the judge of what company he shall seek in Elysium. Other theories are that this second view represents Orpheus' descent into Elysium to recover his beloved Eurydice, so elegantly told by Virgil; or that Admetus is recovering his wife Alcestis from Elysium. This idea is full of grace and bears the poetical impress.

This rare vase is nine inches high and twenty-nine inches in circumference, and has passed through a number of hands at fabulous prices, and was finally purchased by the Duchess of Portland, and then passed to her son the Duke of Portland in 1786, who placed it in the British Museum in London where it now stands.

In his ambition, Mr. Wedgwood, the prince of English potters, desired to reproduce some of the best works of the ancients. He was a wonderful man and far in advance of his time in the study of the antique. He could not buy the vase, but it was loaned him for a year, and in three years he produced a fine and satisfactory copy, which he produced fifty times.

Some of these are owned by private individuals, and others are in museums where everybody can see them. In this, Wedgwood won a ceramic triumph. Verily, in "Portland Mystic Urn."

AMONG the curious occupations engaged in by inhabitants of some of our great cities is that of gathering old corks. The scavengers on the outlook for these hunt in every conceivable place and collect corks in all stages of newness, some comparatively fresh, some covered with dirt and pitch. These are sold to the second-hand cork merchant for a few cents a hundred, who cleans them in acid and generally freshens them up in appearance, sorts them, and sells them for ten or twelve cents a gross to small bottlers and others who can find use for them.

A MILLION dollars worth of polished petrified wood is to be taken to the Paris Exposition. This wood is hauled from Arizona to South Dakota in great logs and stumps weighing many tons. It is then sawed up in shape for polishing by the huge machinery used for the purpose, but it is such a tedious operation that not more than three inches can be sawed in a day. After being cut and polished the stone is worked up into every conceivable shape, from cuff buttons to tops for tables and great columns, which cost a fortune. This great exhibit will be a fine advertisement for Sioux Falls, where the factory is located, for the reason that nowhere else on earth is there machinery mammoth yet delicate enough to saw, plain and put into shape the variety of useful articles to be on exhibition.

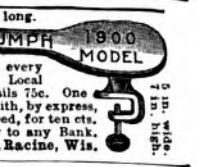
There are some features of modern co-operative plans that appeal to the housewife with especial force during August weather. The problem of what to eat in hot weather is a tridaily worriment. A certain New England city offers an easy solution of the vexed question. A "Hot Food Company" undertakes to furnish any or all meals for any and all occasions. You may prepare your own bill of fare and give it to the canvasser and in due time the dinner or lunch arrives in a hot oven. The company's kitchens are located in various parts of the city so that delivery may be prompt.

Old Home Week is to be observed in New Hampshire from the eleventh to the thirteenth of August. Governor Rollins has sent a hearty invitation to all the absent children of the Granite State. There is a beautiful sentiment in the idea as well as a practical business side. The love of the home of childhood is strong in each human heart—it leads the wanderer home no matter how far his feet have strayed. Those who have been successful return and their presence is an inspiration to the young. Fame and fortune may be won in that world beyond the circling hills. To a foreigner this divided allegiance of Americans must seem like an anomaly. They love the nation but above all they love their native state. Large cities like New York boast clubs of residents that formerly owed allegiance to other states and keep up their love by forming societies known by the names of their native state. New Hampshire is the only state that has elaborated the idea of a reunion within its borders of all absent children.

The American people who have established the vacation have received no little pause for the fact. There is one rather amusing development that comes from an inspection of hotel registers. The "rush" idea is being applied to vacation with a serious prospect of limiting the possible good that may come from rest. In other words vacation is coming to mean only a change of the scene of hurry. The old-fashioned idea was to settle one'sself as comfortably as possible for the week or month of summer that was to be spent in rest and there proceed to rest. Now the multi-millionaire rushes from his country house to Newport, thence to the Adirondacks, with a possible trip to Europe thrown in. The person of more modest income repeats the programme in so far as his means admit and hurries from one place to another in the two weeks that he devotes to vacation. Mental rest may come from change but there is a physical side to vacation that the new style of "hurry" leaves all unprovided for. We Americans must hurry—even when we are supposed to be resting.

A Philadelphia artist announces the startling fact that the feminine neck has increased one inch in length during the last five years. His attention was first drawn to the fact by an observation of the portraits in the Academy. A tape measure was applied to the portraits painted ten years ago, five years ago and now; the data produced the result—one inch increase in five years. Not for rhetoric only have we coined the classical phrase "rubbernecking". The added inch however while it may be a cause of "rubbering" is not a result of the habit. No; it is the clean prim linen collars. First they were accused of ruining the neck, then young women were urged to use them for when they were old they could not; now they are to be responsible for the actual "swan like necks" that poetry has lauded so long. It may possibly be that women have noticed the way their heads were going up in the air and that this accounts for the collarless gown of the latest mode. One wonders what the artist would say to the portraits of our grandmothers with the long necks and sloping shoulders. No linen collar then, surely.

A district messenger boy has made the long voyage to the Transvaal to deliver a message of sympathy to Oom Paul from some of the High School boys of America. This is only another development of the use of school children in political matters. It is foolish in the extreme for this reason if no other. Boys of the high school age can not form opinions independently and it is a moral wrong to influence them to partisanship. As Dooley remarked "Politics is a man's game and women and children and prohibitionists had best keep out of it." It is deplorable to use youth as a means of creating excitement or sympathy for a cause. Our Canadian friends saw in this an attempt to show anti-English spirit and proposed to retaliate by sending a Canadian school boy with a message of sympathy to Aguinaldo. The project has met with little support, the most enthusiastic interest however being shown in the United States. Many letters from Americans who approved the scheme were received. When children are brought into the game of nations for simply spectacular purposes every thinking person must feel a certain humiliation.



The lovers of the phrase "Figures will not lie" anticipate a rich feast in the statistical fact of the present census. The colored maid who prefaced the question of the census enumerator by announcing that the "sensitive man" had come stated but half the truth. Even the most callous collector of facts might become sensitive over the manner in which the questions prescribed by law were answered. The details of enumerators are no doubt amusing enough but they will sink into insignificance beside the deductions that the professional jugglers with fact, fancy and figures will produce. Of all weird and wonderful liars in existence figures are easily first. The census of 1890 states that there are 79,032 more married males in the United States than there are married females. As the widowed are tabulated separately there is but one logical conclusion to be drawn from these figures—that is that a large per cent. of the married women of the United States are bigamists who haven't been discovered by the law. The absurdities of statistical deductions could be multiplied indefinitely. The simplest way is to fortify yourself against being influenced by any sweeping conclusions drawn from the census of 1900.

Holland is holding a Royal Dutch Naval Exhibition which has been throughout the summer and continues until September. One of the royal palaces at the Hague is in use for the exhibition and the young queen has ordered medals to be presented to the most important exhibitors. The exhibition comprises portraits of celebrated naval commanders, descriptions of voyages, charts, models of vessels, and many other records and mementoes of the success of Holland on the sea. Holland was the first nation of the world to attain any rank as a commercial and seafaring power. With the thrifty spirit that has marked Dutch enterprise they sent ships to all the seven seas and their commerce and settlements followed their ships. Holland was one of the earliest nations to become a colonial power and to-day its colonies are five times the size of the mother country. They became the carriers of Europe. England early saw the menace to her commercial interests and in 1651 first passed the Navigation Laws that demanded that all English colonies should trade only in English ships. This was aimed especially at Holland which was then at war with England. It was the commencement of England's colonial power although it was an indirect cause of the loss of her American colonies. The powerful trading companies like the Dutch East India Company have had few rivals. The greatness of Holland has been in its supremacy as a trading nation. Our greatest city once named New Amsterdam is a lasting monument of the foresight of these old Dutch traders. For this reason if no other Americans feel a special interest in the exhibition of Holland's Navy.

There is a somewhat despairing tone in the voice of the conservatives who shrink from the threshold of the new national life that is forced upon us. Hawaii, The Philippines, Porto Rico and the troubles in China all means a new national policy. To the student who rereads the neutrality ideas of Washington as shown in 1789 when Citizen Genet was seeking our aid, and again in his farewell address when he reiterated the declaration that we should keep clear from entangling foreign alliances, we seem to be drifting far from the policy of our fathers. The Monroe Doctrine is but an amplification of Washington's ideas. The recent suggestions made by our Secretary of State in regard to the possibility of either re-affirming or abandoning this principle awakened much apprehension. To the thinker familiar with the history of nations there seems little to awaken apprehension. We can not reconcile the present with the past. To make a fetish of the wise utterances of the men who thought and spoke for the republic in its youth is to announce once for all an end to progress. Jefferson, Hamilton, Washington all and each spoke for the age in which they lived and for our nation in its infancy. Even as strong a party man as Jefferson repudiated his own spoken utterances and the principles of his party when it seemed wisdom to purchase Louisiana. We can not look backwards but forwards. The history of every nation shows a conflict between a party of progress and a party demanding the holding to old conditions. The answer of history shows the inevitable result of the struggle. The history of civilization shows that progress is inevitable and that traditions and precedent must be abandoned at some stage of the advance. China to-day is passing through the struggle but the outcome is plain. Our traditions and precedents must be set aside in the face of new conditions.

Unfortunate Singers. After a career of dazzling success and great prosperity the De Reszkes are both in Europe meeting with some misfortunes. It is openly published that the magnificent tenor voice of Jean De Reszke has completely given out; and that it is doubtful if he is ever again able to continue a public career. How great is this misfortune can be judged from the fact that he receives from $1500 to $2500 for an evening's performance. His brother, Edouard, left this country in April with the intention of visiting his three daughters at boarding school in Paris, before returning to Poland where his wife and youngest daughter live. The latter died shortly after her father's return and he was obliged to hurry the sisters back to Poland. Less than a year ago he lost an only son when only a few months old.

COMFORT again takes occasion this month to call the attention of its readers to the music offer on another page. The elegant sheet music obtainable under this offer is absolutely guaranteed satisfactory to our friends. If you will try it once we will cheerfully refund the money should it prove in the least disappointing; but it will not. Try it yourself and ask your friends to.

CONDUCTED BY DIGITUS.

CONDITIONS.

To have one's hands read in this department, by Digitus, one of the finest living palmists, it is necessary to observe the following conditions:

Impressions of both hands must be sent, fully postpaid and having the name, address and nom de plume of the sender enclosed in the package also.

The package must in every instance be accompanied by the names and addresses of eight new subscribers at twenty-five cents each, the whole amount, $2.00 being remitted, with the package, addressed to COMFORT PALMISTRY CLUB, Augusta, Maine.

No notice will be taken of impressions and requests for readings unless the sender has fully complied with the above conditions.

To take impressions, first hold two large pieces of blank paper over a candle or similar flame, until they are heavily coated with the smoke. Then lay these pieces down, smoke side uppermost on a pad of cotton. Now place the two hands, palms downward, one on each sheet of paper, pressing firmly and steadily down, but taking care not to move the hand. Keep them so for one minute and lift carefully, so as not to disturb the impression. Have ready some fixatif, which can be bought at a drug store or an art store or made with gum arabic and water in an atomizer. Spray this over the impressions before they are moved and allow them to dry. Then they are ready to send.

Smoked paper impressions are the best. But if it is desired to send a plaster cast, take plaster of Paris and dissolve in water to the consistency of thick cream. Pour this into a large shallow dish and when it is hardening place the hand, well-greased, palm downward, in the plaster, pressing downward. Several minutes will be required to get this impression and great care must be taken in removing the hand, not to break the plaster. Casts are exceedingly difficult to send without breaking and should be very carefully packed in a box with the name of the sender written on it. Putty is sometimes successfully used in place of plaster. A good photograph if sufficiently well taken to bring out all the lines, can also be read, although in all cases the smoked paper is the best, if properly treated with fixatif.

Bear in Mind that all the above conditions must be observed.

Also, that letters not complying with them will go into the waste-basket. Readings cannot appear for several months after impressions are sent.

I HAVE had so many inquiries regarding the lines of marriage that I am going to quote from my friend Cheiro in regard to them. He does not follow exactly the same rule that some of the palmists do, but I have noticed that he is much more correct in his prognostications than some of the other readers are. He says what I have always maintained in this respect, that the lines under the fourth finger must be balanced by marks on other portions of the hand, as, for instance, on the side of the line of fate or the lines of influence by the side of the lines of life. He notices another thing that the lines of marriage may be on the side of the hand or may be only marked across the front of the Mount of Mercury. The long lines relate to marriage, the short ones meaning only engagements or short love affairs. On the line of life or fate, if it be marriage we will find it corroborated and information given as to the change in life, position of the marriage line on the Mount of Mercury a very fair idea of the age at the time of marriage may also be obtained.

When the important line is found lying close to the line of heart, the union will be early, about fourteen to twenty-one; near the center of the mount, about twenty-one to twenty-eight; three-quarters up the mount, twenty-eight to thirty-five; and so on. But the line of fate or the line of life will be more accurate, by giving almost the exact date of the change of influence.

A wealthy union is shown by a strong, well-marked line from the side of the line of fate next Luna, running up and joining the line of fate, when the marriage line on Mercury is also well marked.

When, however, the line of influence rises straight on the Mount of Luna and then runs up and into the fate line, the marriage will be more the capricious fancy than real affection.

When the line of influence is stronger than the subject's line of fate, then the person the subject marries will have greater power and more individuality than the subject.

The happiest mark of marriage on the line of fate is when the influence line lies close to the fate line and runs evenly with it.

The line of marriage on the Mount of Mercury should be straight, without breaks, crosses, or irregularities of any kind.

When it curves or droops downward toward the line of heart, it foretells that the person with whom the subject is married will die first.

When the lines curve upward, the possessor is not likely to marry at any time.

When the line of marriage is distinct, but with fine hair-lines dropping from it toward the line of heart, it foretells trouble brought on by the illness and bad health of the person whom the subject marries.

When the line droops with a small cross over the curve, the person the subject is married to will die by accident or sudden death; but when there is a long, gradual curve, gradual ill health will cause the end.

GOV. ALTGELD.

When the line has an island in the center or at any portion, it denotes some very great trouble in married life and a separation while the island lasts.

When the line divides at the end with a drooping fork sloping toward the center of the hand, it tells of divorce or a judicial separation. This is all the more certain if a fine line cross from it to the plain of Mars.

When the line is full of little islands and drooping lines, the subject should be warned not to marry. Such a mark is a sign of the greatest unhappiness.

When full of little islands and forked it is again a sign of unhappiness in marriage.

When the line breaks in two, it denotes a sudden break in the married life.

When the line of marriage sends an offshoot on to the Mount of Sun and into the line of sun, it tells that its possessor will marry some one of distinction, and generally a person in some way famous.

When, on the contrary, it goes downward and cuts the line of sun, the person on whose hand it appears will lose position through marriage.

When a deep line from the top of the mount grows downward and cuts the line of marriage, there will be a great obstacle and opposition to such marriage.

When there is a fine line running parallel with and almost touching the marriage line, it tells of some deep affection after marriage on the side of the person on whose hand it appears.

With these rules from one so prominent and so successful as Cheiro, I believe that the students in this department will obtain much help and be able to go on and read hands quite freely.

The best fate line starts from the rascette and goes straight up through the hand to the Mount of Saturn and even sometimes goes on up to the second joint of the middle finger which indicates great fortune. If the line goes over to the Mount of Apollo it indicates fortune from art or wealth. A perfectly straight line with branches going upward from its two sides indicates a gradual progress from poverty to riches. Straightness and good color from the line of heart up show good fortune in old age with invention in science and a love of country life. A good and well-traced fate line will offset at any time the evil indications of a badly formed life line and will even give a long life.

If the fate line only starts from the line of head it indicates pain and ill health early in life, but with a good head line will indicate fortune acquired late by the intelligence of the subject. It is a very bad sign to have the fate line start from the quadrangle and go only to the Mount of Saturn. If it starts all right at the bottom of the hand and then disappears for a time appearing again later, it indicates that there will be a period of bad luck extending over such length of time as is indicated by the absence of the line, that is, if there is a gap or break from the line of head to just below the line of heart, there will be misfortunes between the ages of thirty and forty and a connecting line will usually show the cause of the ill luck.

I have only one hand to reproduce this month and that is the hand of Governor Altgeld of Illinois. This is a peculiarly marked hand of a very stubborn, phlegmatic individual. It is easy to be seen that the owner of this hand would not be coerced by any war of words, that he would be a hard enemy to deal with. He is a man of very strong personality and one who has had to fight his way from his youth up. His mentality is not very strong except as he has a sort of bull dog pugnacity which helps him. He has considerable tact, however, much more than we should expect in a man like him. His head line is very short, but it indicates that he will have the courage of his convictions. This is indicated elsewhere in his hand to such a degree that he is almost headstrong. He would not give in to anybody else even though he knew that he was in the wrong he would not give up. He has a tremendous will power and an unbounded love of authority, which will keep him at the head of things when discouragements are so great that other men would quickly yield. He had many obstacles to fight against in the first part of his life, but has persevered and will live to his allotted three score years and ten, unless some sudden accident carries him off. He has had a great many things to worry and annoy him and during the first half of his life more than the world realizes. He cares but little for the opposite sex and marriage and family ties are of but little consideration to him. He is, however, a good business man and will accumulate property as long as he lives.

One of the important things to be remembered by the student is the difference between the right and left hands. There is a marked difference between them in the case of nearly every one and the reader should examine both and depend more upon the information contained in the right hand than in the left, since the right shows the strength and experience, while the left shows the natural character. Place both hands side by side and examine them carefully. In case of a left-handed person, the left is the one to be depended upon.

The shape of the hand also has a great deal to do with the reading of it. The indications are by no means confined to the palm. The reading of the shape and quality of the hand is called chirognomy and gives us a superficial idea, by the formation and general appearance, of the character and disposition. Remember there are seven types of hands. Note the palm of the hand, whether it is thick or thin, well proportioned or over developed, hard or soft, whether the palm is hollow and whether there is any excess of formation; then consider the joints, whether they are developed fully or abnormally, whether the fingers are smooth or jointed and the quality of the joints, then take into account the comparative length of the fingers and the size of the hand and the hand writing if possible, the general qualities of the fingers and the finger tips, whether square, spatulate, round or conical and the color of the hands; hairiness of the hand must also be taken into account as it indicates strength of character or the absence of it.

Consider the thumb, first and second joints, as to whether the will, reason and tact are developed, whether the thumb be large or small and the modifying signs on it. The construction of the hand is important and each individual finger must be studied with all its characteristics. Then the habitual action and natural position of the hand must be accounted for and the finger nails, whether they are short, broad, wide or narrow in shape and the quality of them also.

The seven types are the elementary or necessary hand, the spatulate, active hand, the conical artistic hand, the square or useful hand, the knotty hand, the pointed or Psyche hand and one which is more common and may be made up of any two or three of the other types.

The Postal Exhibit at Paris.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

A NOTABLE feature of the United States display at the Paris Exposition will be that of the Postal exhibit. This is in charge of Mr. George W. Beavers, chief of the salary and allowance division of the United States Postoffice, who proposes to establish a model post office in the building set apart for the United States exhibit. This will serve a double purpose, as it will not only give visitors to the exposition an actual, practical working model of our postal system, but, as it will handle all mail belonging to citizens of our country visiting the exposition, it will be of inestimable value to such visitors. In this model postoffice it will be possible to watch the progress of letters from the moment they are mailed; to see them collected, turned in at the office, assorted, stamped, and distributed according to States. The cancelling machines now in use in this department, and which have made such a revolution in the past few years in the handling of mail, will be at work here in several different patterns, as well as all other recent devices for lessening the labor and expediting the work of the postal service. Mr. Beavers has for some months been in correspondence with the manufacturers who furnish apparatus of various kinds for handling the work of a first-class office, and their response has been so generous that he is already well supplied with samples of all the appliances used in the service.

Mr. Beavers has also in his exhibit examples of the system of files and of the method of filing applications for increase of salary and allowance which he has invented and which are in use in his division in the national postoffice in Washington. This system of files is the most complete and satisfactory of any now in use in any department, and is well worth the careful study of the visitor interested in such matters.

There will also be a display, in this exhibit, of articles from the United States Postoffice Museum, showing the curious articles which sometimes go through the mails.

There is also here a full issue of all the stamps used at present in the United States, also a full collection of all issues since the stamping system was first invented.

Another interesting portion of this exhibit is that of the development of the postal service, from the pack pony, the horse and saddle bags, dogs drawing a sledge, etc., to the modern mail car with all the latest improvements.

DEAR NIECES AND NEPHEWS:

Welcome to you all. And a warm welcome it must of necessity be this hot August weather. I wish I could gather you all together with me on the Maine seashore or in the Colorado mountains to read this month's packet of letters; but since that is impossible let us each make herself or himself as comfortable as individual circumstances will allow while reading them.

Our first letter explains itself, and will, I think, although late in reaching you, be interesting to all who were not so fortunate as to see the eclipse for themselves. I had the pleasure of watching it from the navy yard in Portsmouth, Va., and my impressions of it were much the same as those of Mrs. Rogers.

"I think your many readers will be deeply interested in a description of the grand solar eclipse of 1900.

"Our classic little city was fortunate enough to be in the very center of the belt of totality, and Macon, Atlanta and other large cities sent their hundreds to this capital of the eclipse. On a woodland slope near the suburbs Prof. Updegraff of the Naval Observatory at Washington established his fine astronomical apparatus, an immense spectroscope, water clock, powerful telescopes and other needful arrangements for observation. On another eminence, not far distant, were representatives of the ancient universities of Leyden and Utrecht, while on a level space almost in the city, was the plant of the New Jersey Observatory. About two miles west, on a spur of the mountain, was stationed Prof. Lord of the University of Ohio, while on another well chosen spot was the tent of the Philadelphia High School.

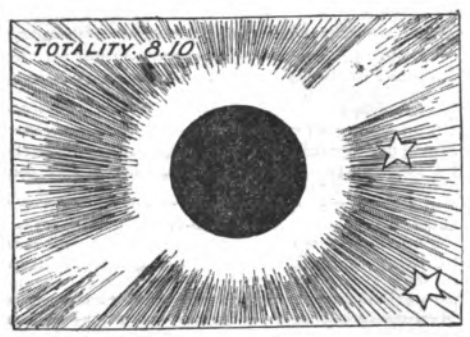
"Ordinary business was suspended and at five o'clock, when the Queen of Morn had lightly tipped each hill with gold, hundreds of people wended their way to the great reservoir which crowns Mount Hawthorn. There it was thought the shadow bands would be manifested more distinctly. It is a favored spot indeed, not only for witnessing an eclipse, but for gorgeous sunsets and all things bright to lovers of Nature. There is a magnificent view of the surrounding hills, broad cotton fields, vineyards and peach orchards, while the city with its factories, cotton mills, church steeples and beautiful homes presents a picture worth seeing at any time, independent of an eclipse.

"The times of the contact, which are observable on the cut, were in accordance with the predictions of the astronomers. Just before the period of totality wavy shadows like ripples of water moved onward from the west and cast upon open spaces crescent-shaped figures, being a reflection of the sun's image at that moment. On the horizon in every direction was a broad belt of grayish blue, blending into crimson, then into paler pink, and finally assuming a salmon hue before blending with the solemn leaden shade of the sky. The moon was no longer a fair, pale goddess but an immense ball of midnight blackness which impertinently obtruded its grandeur upon the glorious orb of day, jealously shutting out the last golden ray. A deep stillness fell upon the expectant throng. A wierd, unearthly shadow was over the world. Every heart was subdued and felt the Presence of a mighty, unseen Power beyond all this. One could scarcely distinguish his best friend. But see! there is a brilliant circle of dazling light around the dark shadow of the moon and two great bands of light! That is the corona, such as the immaculate halo that surrounds the Eternal King. Is it not grand beyond expression! The astronomers say those rays extend over millions of miles.

"To the right proud Mercury sat in majestic contemplation, while farther down was beautiful Aldebaran, both revealing for the first time their glory to Aurora. In a few moments the great celestial display was over and we returned to every-day life with a magnificent scene which time can never efface, pictured on memory's walls."

LOULA K. ROGERS, BARNESVILLE, GA.



At my point of observation of the eclipse various objects, leaves of trees, the rims of our hats, and even straight articles, gave these same crescent shaped shadows, with the strange phenomenon that these shadows were not heavy and black, but mere lace-like edges of shadow. The corona seemed to me to be of dazzling golden light instead of "white" as our writer saw it, and the "two great bands of light" resembled, as I saw them, the shafts of light which shoot out from the Aurora Borealis. Strange, indeed, was it to see the stars appear, one after another, in the somber sky, while the beautiful dawn tints on the horizon were wonderful to behold.

Here is a letter from our cousin who is a page in the Texas Lesislature.

"Port Arthur is situated on Sabine Lake in the southeastern extremity of Texas. The lake is too shallow for navigation of ocean steamers, but the enterprising people procured three large dredge boats, and worked them night and day for two years, and the result is they have made a channel through the prairie eight miles long, sixteen feet wide and from sixteen to twenty-five feet deep. I saw the first steamer that ever came through it, the United States Revenue Cutter Galveston, and as it came up to the wharf after its trip, the United States band of the 2d. Mo. U. S. V's played the Star Spangled Banner, all the whistles blew and cannon boomed, and the Port Arthur channel was formally opened, and a new port was given to Texas, one that will add to its commercial facilities ten fold.

"After a trip on the channel we returned and inspected the mammoth grain elevator, which has a carrying capacity of thirty thousand bushels per hour, which is said to be the greatest carrying capacity of any elevator in the world."

ALBERT ADAMS, Austin, Texas.

Our next letter is a deeply interesting one.

"The Massachusetts Reformatory is located at Concord, that famous old town of many historic associations. What odd contrasts of old and new! The battlefield, and recently erected monument,—

'By the rude bridge which spanned the flood,—
Their flag to Freedom's breeze unfurled,
The rude, embattled farmers stood,
And fired the shot heard round the world.'

"Emerson's home is on one side of the village, and the Reformatory on the other; the 'Wayside', where Hawthorne wrote, and where later Louise M. Alcott evolved her winsome 'Little Women', the 'Hall of Philosophy' are there; and on the same street the farm on which was originated that most popular of fruits, the 'Concord grape.'

"It was not of Concord I started to write, however, but of an incident at the Reformatory. About four years ago a young man was sent there from the police court of Boston. He had been convicted of assault with intent to rob. He was a notoriously tough character, who had been arrested several times before, and who was known to the police as always ready to fight. When placed in the Reformatory he was sullen and rebellious, and very soon had to be punished. All the inmates of the Reformatory learn a trade. This man was set to engraving. He was very soon found to have a decided talent for this. In the room where he worked was some clay for modeling. One day he picked up a piece and almost involuntarily moulded it into an artistic object. He was transferred to that department and soon developed remarkable talent. He modeled a beautiful, life-size head of the Madonna. Then he took as a model one of the boys in the shop, and made a capital life-size likeness of him. The Superintendent, Mr. J. F. Scott, took so much interest in the case that he had an experienced workman come up from Boston to give the prisoner several lessons. The work occupied two years, and under its influence the 'tough' prisoner became a changed man. At first he was as quick tempered and ugly as ever, but when he became angry he seemed to stop and say to himself, 'Now if I'm not careful what I do I shall be punished.' That would mean depriving him of the time to work at his favorite occupation, and in the end the desire to keep on with this would conquer. His deportment came to be so good that he was released after a confinement of two years, and is now employed as a successful carver in an establishment in a large city where he gets good pay and has an opportunity to study evenings in a first class art school.

B. T. MAX, Concord, N. H.

Here is a new cousin who tells us of her far western home.

"My home is in beautiful Larkin Valley, Santa Cruz County, California, about four miles northwest of Watsonville, and three miles east, but not in sight of, the bay of Monterey. This valley is about three miles long and contains about two thousand acres of fertile, well watered land adapted to the culture of grain, fruit, berries, etc. The water is pure and soft, all coming from springs. The valley is well sheltered from coast wind and fog by a low range of hills.

"From the hill west of our house one can command a splendid view of the surrounding country. To the eastward lies the Conalitos Ranch, then Green Valley. Next beyond these lies the southern portion of the Santa Cruz mountains, upon whose rugged sides the grand redwoods, once monarchs of the mountains, have in many places almost entirely given way to the woodman's axe and are fast being replaced by orchard tree and vine. Even the sides of Loma Prieatas—the highest point of the range within our ken, are being desecrated by the irrepressible orchardist. Alas! poor bruin must depart from his native chaparral. In times gone by there were innumerable California lions or cougars, grizzly bears and rattlesnakes here. South of all this, reaching from mountains to sea, lies the renowned Pajaw Valley, celebrated for its excellent land, its lovely scenery, its apple orchards and its hop yards, its strawberries and its sugar beets, which until last year were crushed at the Watsonville Beet Sugar Factory, owned and operated by Claus Spreckles. Last year he had all shipped to his new factory, the largest in the world, near Salinas city. Also Pajaw Valley can boast of its beautiful tree-dotted town, Watsonville, a most thriving little city of some five thousand inhabitants. And last but not least, its splendid chain of five fresh water lakes, fed by subteranean mountain streams and drained by small streams into Pajaw river.

"On the eastern bank of the largest, College Lake, stands the Pajaw Valley Orphanage, which affords a home and tuition for some four hundred homeless boys. A large farm and orchard attached furnish a portion of their support and the state also appropriates money yearly for their maintenance. It is under the supervision of the German Franciscan Fathers."

IVEA B. CLARK, Watsonville, Cal.

Dear me! Rosa, I'm afraid you do not read my page carefully. We often have letters from Texas. Our Texas cousins are very kind to us; but your letter is just as welcome as if we had no others.

"Much has been said about other states, but I haven't seen a letter from Texas. This part of the state is black land, mostly prairie. In summer the prairies are covered with sweet flowers of all colors, with an abundance of wild roses. How many of you cousins can make artificial flowers? I can make both paper and cloth flowers, and I will tell you how to make a paper rose. Take a strip of tissue paper one and one half inches wide and about twenty-five inches long; fold up until one inch across, than scallop the top. Have your center fixed on a small wire, then take a hat pin and roll each side of the scallops; then press both thumbs together, that will make the scallop wrinkled, then fold around and around the wire, then take another strip of paper and fix as above, roll this strip on backwards; then take green paper and wrap your wire and let green extend up on the rose leaves. If you cousins will send me your name and address and a four cent stamp to pay postage I will send you a sample rose and bud, also leaves. I hope you will try to make the beautiful rose."

ROSA ROBERTS, Grayson, Texas.

Now let us shake hands with our Western cousin John Hartz, and join him in a visit to his home.

"Now, dear reader, let me take you to visit my home, which is in the south-eastern part of Iowa. Coming from the east we will first cross the Mississippi river on the great Rock Island bridge, which has cost our Government more than three million dollars. Then, going westward, we cross very fertile plains, green with corn, oats, wheat, barley, etc. After traveling about one hundred miles the conductor will be calling out 'Victor', which is my stopping place. The first thing to be seen of Victor is a large hotel, and a still larger saloon; but as all the saloons in our county were closed this spring there is no danger of getting to be a drunkard in Victor. But the carriage is waiting for us so we will drive to my home, which is about five miles south of the town.

"If you had come thirty years earlier you would not have found any cultivated land, for at that time this country was only a rolling prairie; but now there is hardly an acre of uncultivated land, and land now sells for about forty-eight dollars per acre. In the winter there are several feet of snow on the ground, but in the summer it is very warm and the roads are very smooth. The climate is healthy but it is not as mild as the eastern or most western states. But the people here are as well educated as those in the eastern states. The principal occupation of the people in this section is stock raising and grain growing. Corn is the grain most extensively raised; next come oats, wheat, rye, barley and potatoes. Fruit does very well here and timothy hay is often thrashed for seed. Horses, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry is the stock which is mostly raised. I would like to take my cousins on a wild duck or geese hunt, but I am afraid our Auntie is getting impatient with me, so good-by for this time."

JOHN B. HARTZ, Victor, Iowa.

I have a letter from Dollie Simmons of Walker, Oregon, describing an Indian dance, but as I have lately published a very similar account I must content myself with thanking her for it and ask her to try us again with a different topic.

Here is a letter from a lonely little German cousin.

"As a new cousin in the COMFORT circle I hope you will accept this letter and give me a chance to get acquainted with the cousins. I live away out in the State of Washington on a farm in Lincoln county. We have fine scenery in view—mountains, rivers, waterfalls, lawns and forests. In the river bottom lands are fine orchards and on the hills great wheat fields. One ought to be happy here, but though I have my parents, my brothers and my music I have no sister and no girl friend, and sometimes I am lonely for want of one. After work is done girls want other girls to chat with. Folks tell me there are lots of girls in the eastern States. I would like to know and write to some of them. I am a German girl. Are any of the cousins German, I wonder?"

MATILDA JENNE,
Rocklyn, Washington.

I have a very well written letter from a little girl of fourteen years, who signs herself Viola Bagley. But, Viola dear, if you expect your letters to be published you must write only on one side of your paper.

Here is still another letter which reached me too late for July.

"Among all the people who have felt their hearts swell with patriotism as they have looked at the old Liberty Bell scarcely one in a thousand has any knowledge of its history beyond the bare fact that it was rung on July 4th, 1776, to let the waiting people know that the Declaration of Independence had been signed and we had become a free people.

"In 1751, when the State House being built in Philadelphia was nearing completion, the 'Representatives of the Province of Pennsylvania' met together and appointed Isaac Norris, Thomas Leech and Edward Warner a committee to secure a bell for the building. These men then authorized Robert Charles, the Colonial agent in London, to have a bell made which should cost about a hundred pounds sterling, should weigh about two thousand pounds, and have inscribed on one side the words 'By Order of the Assembly of the Province of Pennsylvania, for the State House in the City of Philadelphia, 1752,' and on the other was to be the quotation 'Proclaim liberty throughout all the land, to all the inhabitants thereof. Leviticus XXV. 10.'

"In August, 1752, the bell arrived and was hung in its place, but when tested, it cracked with the first stroke. An effort was made to send it back to London to be re-cast, but the only boat available was too small. After much discussion the firm of Passo Stow of Philadelphia, offered to re-cast it. The first trial resulted in failure, but the second was successful, and in June 1753, the bell was finally hung.

"In 1777, when the British were approaching Philadelphia, the bell was taken down and removed to Allentown to save it from the enemy. In 1781 it was hung in the tower of the State House where it remained until it cracked while being tolled to announce the death of the Chief Justice, John Marshall, on July 6th, 1835.

"After a time the clapper was removed from the bell and it was mounted on the original framework and placed in Independence Hall, where it now stands."

EVA GALLIARD, Girard, Penn.

We are glad to welcome Mabel Horton among us and we shall listen with interest to her account of Hiwassee College.

"Hiwassee College is situated in a picturesque valley lying between the Southern and Atlanta, Knoxville and Northern railroads, two miles from Madisonville. It was founded in 1849 by Rob't Doak and others, and a charter was obtained in 1850. At first the school was taught at Bat Creek camp-ground with the church for a school house and the camps used as dormitories for the young men, but soon after a nice brick house known as the Doak building was erected, and now six fine buildings grace the College grounds.

"Hiwassee College has long been known as a noted institution of learning, boys from perhaps every state in the Union having attended school there, and have left her halls well prepared to fight the battles of life, and have become prosperous, influential, and wealthy men.

Rev. J. H. Brunner D. D., who retired as President of this College not long ago, was said to be the oldest College President in Tennessee and perhaps the oldest in the United States.

"The school is still in a prosperous condition, and a grand time is expected when the celebration of the semi-centennial occurs. Many old students will no doubt come at that time to visit their "Alma Mater."

MABEL HORTON, Madisonville, Tenn.

This letter gives us a pleasant account of the objects usually seen by the visitor to New Orleans.

"I recently took a trip to the grand old city of New Orleans. As I passed up Canal street, the principal business street of the city, the first object to attract my attention was the monument to Henry Clay. The Esplanade car carried me past fine residences, and from the car window I also saw the United States Mint. This is a three storied building with an entrance somewhat resembling that of the White House at Washington. Audubon Park is one of the prettiest parks I have ever seen. The great live-oak which spreads its branches over the artificial lake, and the rustic bridge suspended across the water make a very picturesque scene.

Of the churches the most interesting are the Jesuit church with its brass altars and its statuary, and the St. Louis Cathedral. The Jackson Monument in Jackson Square, opposite this Cathedral, was erected in honor of Gen. Andrew Jackson, the hero of New Orleans. We visited Metairie cemetery. Among its most noted monuments and tombs is the Armory Northern Virginia Monument, which is most beautiful, standing high upon a mound of closely mown grass. Near by is a tomb built to resemble an Egyptian pyramid. St. Louis cemetery is one of the most unique in America, the vaults being made in the walls; thus the walls present the appearance of a huge cabinet having hundreds of drawers. In St. Roch's cemetery, at intervals along the walks leading up to the chapels, are small summer pavilions in which are the stations of the cross.

At the West End is a beautiful walk along the lake embowered in trees, and called the Lover's walk. The shrubbery puzzle is a hedged walk which makes numerous turns and finally ends in a small cave.

The Levee at New Orleans is the terminus for several steamship lines, and the loading of cotton there is one of the characteristic sights of the city. It was very odd to me to see the water running up from the levee to the canals, but this is on account of the levee being so much higher than the city."

JOSEPH A. DIEMER, Mobile, Alabama.

And now I must regretfully break up our session, for our allotted time and space are both at an end; so good by until September. AUNT MINERVA.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE newest embroidered table linens are linen exclusively. They are worked with a linen floss, and are all white. The effect is especially good. Of course they launder perfectly, and the design seems a part of the fabric instead of an applied decoration, although it is heavily raised. With women who like rich effects without any appearance of ostentation, this style of embroidery is bound to prove a favorite. The designs are the same as those used in silk embroidery, with preference given to small and dainty patterns rather than broad effects. The linen used for the work is lustrous and rather heavy.

A novelty in collar-button boxes may easily be made from a discarded collar. Cut enough from the ends of the collar to leave it twelve and one-half inches long. Cover the collar with striped percale of a pattern suitable for a shirt waist. The work will be most readily and neatly done by means of a good paste. After the collar is covered, draw the ends together and catch with a few stitches at the bottom, lapping as much as it would be lapped in wearing. For the bottom of the box cut a round piece of pasteboard of the right size, cover it with the percale, and overhand the edge to the bottom edge of the collar. Cut a strip of cardboard not quite as wide as the depth of the collar and slip inside to form a foundation for the lid of the box to rest upon. Cut from paste board a lid which will just slip inside the collar when covered. Cover this with the percale, and with a sharp knife make a slit in the middle just large enough to push the top of a collar button through. The lid rests upon the cardboard inside the collar, and the top of the collar button will form a handle to lift it by. To complete the box, tie a narrow black ribbon around it to simulate a string tie, and make the bow where the corners of the collar lap.

Now that baby ribbon is used upon so many pieces of lingerie, and in various ways about the young girl's toilet, a case of baby ribbon makes a most acceptable addition to the dressing table.

The outside of the case may be of linen or silk as preferred. The silks in dainty Dresden designs or in the richer Persian patterns are especially pretty for the purpose. Make the case five and one-half inches wide and nine inches long, and line with a plain shade of silk to correspond or contrast well with the cover. Run three sides, turn, put in a sheet of wadding, and overhand the remaining side. Lay a piece of satin ribbon eight inches long and from one-half to three-fourths of an inch wide, across the inside of the case and catch it down to the lining and wadding at intervals of about an inch. At one end catch it again leaving a space only large enough to hold a tape needle. Now through the one-inch spaces draw bunches of baby ribbon, and place the tape needle in the narrow space.

Finish the case with a piece of plain ribbon of sufficient length to tie around the case when rolled or folded and to make a pretty bow. The baby ribbon inside the case may be of a variety of shades, or in a single color.

Comparatively few people are systematic with their correspondence, and anything which will prove an aid toward that end should be welcome.

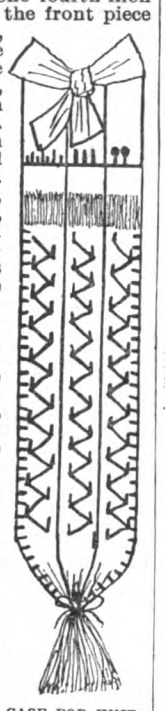
The dainty little record book which I am going to describe would scarcely be needed by the friend whom I recently found writing a letter.

"I am answering a letter which just came in the mail," she said. "I always answer a letter as soon as it comes, within fifteen minutes if I can have the time then."

It certainly is easier to write a letter just after reading one from a friend, but I fear very few of us do it, and hence the value of the record book. This consists simply of one or two sheets of note paper ruled into three spaces extending up and down the page. The first space is broad and leaves room to write the name of the one from whom the letter is received. The second and third spaces are narrow, giving room only for a date. Over the broad space is printed in pretty lettering the one word "From;" over the second space the abbreviation, "Rec'd." and over the third, "Ans'd."

RECORD OF LETTERS.

If this is filled as letters come and go, one's correspondence will be systematically looked after, and the one who keeps such a record will be much more likely to answer half-forgotten letters when her remissness is thus brought to mind. The record is made attractive by means of the cover which is as unique as it is pretty, and because of this pretty cover the whole can be used as an inexpensive gift. To make the cover take a piece of water color paper, or other paper with a somewhat rough and artistic looking surface, and cut a folded piece which will be a little larger than the sheets of note paper which are to be fastened within it.



On the middle of the front of this cover draw a group of over-lapping envelopes with pen and ink. The top envelope should show the back, as though addressed, and the post-mark, from some letter received could be copied as exactly as possible. Paint a semblance to a stamp in the right hand upper corner, or if you cannot do this paste a cancelled stamp there. Address the envelope to the person for whom the record is intended. Around the cluster of envelopes a design may be drawn or painted. One which was given away at Christmas time had a wreath of holly with its red berries, but any other design could be used as well, or if one does not paint, the pen and ink work on the envelopes would be sufficient decoration. When the cover is finished two holes should be made through both cover and note paper at the back, and a pretty ribbon drawn through and tied.

A dainty little button bag which takes up the smallest possible amount of space in one's valise, and which is sure to prove of the greatest convenience, is made from a piece of ribbon three and three-fourths inches wide and twelve inches long.

Cut the ribbon in two and hem one end of each piece over whalebone cut just the length to reach across the ribbon. Lay the two pieces of ribbon together and overhand the two sides, leaving an opening upon one side three inches from the top, or unfinished end, one-half an inch long. Hem the upper end to form a narrow casing. Next run two seams across the ribbon, even with the top and bottom of the half-inch opening at the side, to form a narrow pocket. Cut a card of pasteboard to fit into this pocket and cover it with silk. This is to hold a few needles. At one end add a small loop of baby ribbon to draw it out by, and run baby ribbon in the casing at the top. The upper pocket, between the casing and the needle pocket, is for one or two spools of thread, or for cards of thread which have been wound from a greater number of spools. Below the needle pocket is the space for buttons. This section opens by pressing the two sides together at the bottom, thus causing the whalebone to spring apart. When released the pocket closes again securely.

The new ribbons which are striped across are especially pretty for such a case.

A case for your knitting needles is very convenient, as it will hold them when not in use, and when wanted you do not have to hunt in boxes and drawers for "those needles." To make the case use white and yellow dress braid. Cut four pieces of the white and two of the yellow, twelve inches long; sew two of white and one of yellow, having yellow in middle, over and over, leaving one and one-fourth inch on each end not sewed. For the front piece feather stitch, as in illustration, yellow floss on white, white floss on yellow braid; sew the three strips for back together, leaving one and one-fourth inches on bottom not sewed. At top of back make a hem across and slip in this hem small whalebone to keep straight. Ravel the top of front piece, turn fringe over onto outside, lay the two pieces together and button hole outside edge together with very short stitches a little way apart; gather the bottom where you stopped sewing the braids, ravel out all below and tie a narrow ribbon around it. Put enough cotton in bottom to fill; this keeps the needles from slipping through. Then cut of white cardboard a strip wide enough to slip in and so it will come just below the opening; this keeps it out in good shape; fasten a ring on top to hang by and over this place a yellow bow.

CASE FOR KNITTING NEEDLES.

One of our good friends, who has given us friendly advice before, tells us now how to shrink yarn before knitting it.

"Place the yarn in clean white cloth, fold and place in steamer, and steam until damp; be sure that water and everything used is free from dust. Take out and lay loosely on cloth to dry. This is especially nice for any yarn used for baby, as it will have to be washed so often, and it does not shrink and mat as it does when it is not shrunk before knitting."

She further says:

"In knitting the toe of stockings a good plan is to knit silk thread with the wool, beginning at the taking in of the toe; do the same with the heel and if for a child the part that comes over the knee, as it adds greatly to the strength of those parts. Knitting silk may be used, but sewing silk makes it less thick and is equally strong. Match the color or use black; it goes well with most yarns."

PLACES TO VISIT IN PARIS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

ASIDE from the Exposition few cities can offer more attractions than the capital of France, and we would call attention to some facts concerning a few of the most interesting features.

The "Arc De Triomphe De L'Etoile" is the largest arch in existence, measuring one hundred and sixty feet in height, one hundred and forty-six feet in width and seventy-two in depth. It was begun by Napoleon I. and was finished by Louis Philippe.

The "Museum de Cluny" was built in 1490 as a Paris residence for the wealthy Benedictine monks. These abbots of Cluny seldom resided here so loaned their building to members of the royal family. Mary, widow of Louis XII. inhabited it after the death of her husband and her bed-chamber is still called "Chamber De La Reine Blanche" as it was customary for queens of France to wear white mourning. In 1625 nuns from Port Royal took possession of it. At one time it was owned by a troop of comedians. In revolutionary times it was national property. It was afterward purchased privately and finally became property of the government.

The Palace of the Luxembourg was built by Marie de Medicis after the model of a Florentine Palace. Part of this building the Senate now occupies and the rest is a museum of paintings and statuary second only to those exhibited in the Louvre.

The Louvre is the largest and most important building in Paris. Its origin is uncertain but it was probably erected about 1217, though no part of this building remains. Catherine de Medicis constructed a large part of the present building. A short distance from The Louvre is the Palais Royal. It was erected in 1136 by Richelieu and afterwards fell into possession of Anne of Austria, who occupied it with her two sons. It was partially burned in 1871. In the gardens surrounding the Palais during the summer, concerts are given daily. Adjoining the Louvre also is all that remains of the Palais Des Tuileries.

The "Ecole Militaire" is the scene of Captain Dreyfus' humiliation before he was taken to the Ile du Diable.

Colonne De Jiullet was erected in 1831 on the site of the Bastile. The largest market place in Paris is Halles Centrales, covering an area of twenty-two acres.

The Bourse is the Parisian's stock exchange. The Catacombs, formerly quarries, contain the remains of nearly four million human beings, whose bones form altars, crosses, etc.

The students part of the city known as the Latin Quarter is well worth visiting, where St. Michæl reigns as patron saint.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; any one will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. Particulars free. MRS. M. COMFORT, Silk Dept. B, Augusta, Maine.

CONDUCTED BY AUNT SARAH.

BREAD being a necessity to all sorts and conditions of men, and the making of good bread being an accomplishment not so common among housewives as one would think—a few general hints on the art may be of considerable help to all those who wish to know how to make bread, and to feel that their method is a reliable one. There are so many people who can make good bread almost always, and yet once in a while, for apparently no reason under the sun, their bread will be a disgrace to them. The greatest difficulty, of course, is in its turning sour; except in hot weather, there is no excuse for sour bread; sometimes, when the weather is very warm, before one can get at it to knead and get it to rising, it will be well on into the forenoon, and then the bread will have a sour odor and flavor; for this reason it is well, in the very hot weather, to get up a little earlier in the morning and knead the bread and get it into the pans to rise, before breakfast, when the morning is still cool and the fire in the range has not made the temperature of the kitchen unbearable. No wonder the bread sours, and yet, bread we must have, and it is just at this critical time that we have to make it oftener, on account of its getting mouldy if kept too long.

The following recipe gives two loaves, of ordinary size.

WHEAT BREAD.

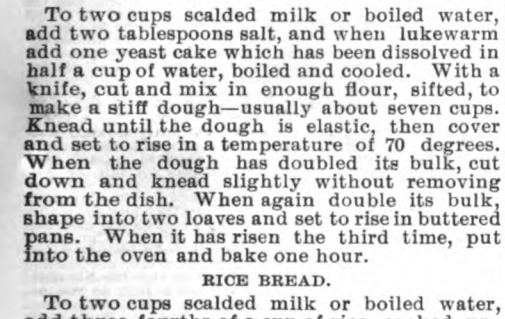
To two cups scalded milk or boiled water, add two tablespoons salt, and when lukewarm add one yeast cake which has been dissolved in half a cup of water, boiled and cooled. With a knife, cut and mix in enough flour, sifted, to make a stiff dough—usually about seven cups. Knead until the dough is elastic, then cover and set to rise in a temperature of 70 degrees. When the dough has doubled its bulk, cut down and knead slightly without removing from the dish. When again double its bulk, shape into two loaves and set to rise in buttered pans. When it has risen the third time, put into the oven and bake one hour.

RICE BREAD.

To two cups scalded milk or boiled water, add three-fourths of a cup of rice, cooked until tender and while still hot add two tablespoons butter; then proceed as in first recipe. Oatmeal may be used instead of the rice, if desired.

BROWN BREAD.

Sift together one cup each of corn meal, rye meal and entire wheat flour, one teaspoon salt and three teaspoons soda. Add three-fourths cup molasses and one pint sour milk. Steam in a covered mould for three and a half hours, being sure that the water comes up half way around the mould all the time.



BAKING POWDER BISCUIT.

Sift four cups of flour two or three times, with one teaspoon salt, and, for each cup of flour, two level teaspoons baking-powder. Work into the flour one-third of a cup of butter, and when the mixture looks like meal, add gradually one pint of milk and mix well. When of a consistency to handle, turn out onto a floured board and roll into a sheet half an inch thick. Cut into rounds with a small biscuit cutter. Bake fifteen minutes.

To give rolls and bread a glossy brown crust, a short time before removing from the oven brush over the top of each loaf or roll with the beaten yolk of egg diluted with a little milk, or with a little sugar dissolved in milk.

This being the preserving season, some recipes a little out of the ordinary may be of interest to some of the good housewives who are always on the alert for new ideas.

Currants are always obtainable, and it often happens that one has a few currant bushes of her own from which to pick the delicious fruit, which is all the more interesting. Of course every one likes spiced fruit as a relish for meats, and we have a good recipe to offer for this—also one for bottled currants which may be used in the same way and are much easier to do, as they are put up cold.

FANCY SANDWICHES.

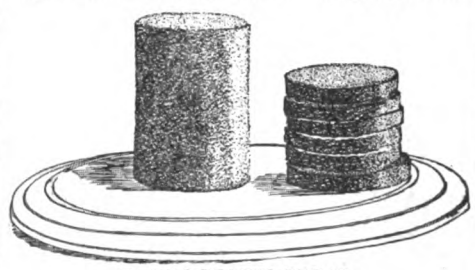
SPICED CURRANTS.

For seven pounds of currants, melt four pounds of sugar in one pint vinegar; add the currants and one tablespoon each of ground cinnamon and cloves and one teaspoon of allspice and a little nutmeg (if you like the flavor of nutmeg). Boil two hours and bottle

For the bottled currants, mix together fine granulated sugar and currants which have been stemmed, in the proportion of one and one-fourth pounds of sugar to one pound of currants. Then mash the fruit thoroughly and put into glass jars, sealing up as other preserves. Roll in paper and set in a dark, cool place, and when it is served it has the flavor of fresh fruit.

PRESERVED RHUBARB.

To each pound of rhubarb allow three-fourths of a pound of sugar. Make a syrup with the sugar and enough water to keep from burning; add rhubarb and cook until tender, keeping the pieces as whole as possible. Skim out the rhubarb and boil the syrup until thick; reheat the rhubarb and put into jars.



If one likes the rhubarb that is not quite so rich, the following recipe will be preferred: Cut the rhubarb the length of height of jars into which it is to be packed; after putting in the stalks, fill the cans with cold water and set into a boiler, putting covers onto cans loosely. Fill the boiler with cold water, and after it has been boiling an hour the rhubarb will be sufficiently cooked, when screw down the covers tightly.

To preserve strawberries whole, select the largest and most perfect berries. Mash the others and boil for fifteen minutes without water, then strain through a jelly bag. Allow one pound of sugar to each quart of strawberry juice. Make a syrup with a pint of water to each two pounds of sugar, and skim; pour in the juice of the berries and boil from five to ten minutes; pour the syrup into glass jars and then put in the whole berries, carefully, so as to keep them in perfect shape, putting in as many as the syrup will cover without crowding. When perfectly cold, cover with paper dipped in brandy.

CHILI SAUCE.

Remove the skins from a hundred ripe tomatoes; add twenty-four green peppers which have been finely chopped, eighteen large onions chopped fine, one pound brown sugar, nine large tablespoons salt, eighteen level teaspoons each of allspice, ginger and cloves, and one gallon vinegar; boil slowly, stirring often, for one hour. Seal in fruit jars.

If ginger is not liked, use only the cinnamon, allspice and cloves, and in the proportions liked; tastes differ, and many people prefer chili sauce to taste more strongly of the tomatoes than of the spices, and should therefore spice according to the individual taste.

More Fragrant Than the Rose.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

UNCLE Sam is the world's greatest producer of onion seed today, the annual product being something well-nigh fabulous. Nor is this very surprising when it is considered that onions are raised more extensively then any other vegetable, with the possible exception of cabbages. An onion goes into every soup and every stew; every "made dish" practically has onion in it. Furthermore, onions are very easily grown, and correspondingly cheap to buy; many of them are eaten raw by the poorer classes.

Great quantities of onion seed are exported to Europe from the United States, and it appears that this is the oldest of all seed-growing industries in America, dating back nearly two centuries and a half in the State of Connecticut. The bulk of the crop is gathered in California, though some onion seed is grown in Connecticut, Michigan and the neighborhood of Philadelphia. It is harvested by hand, with scythe or hand-knife, and is cleaned by threshing machines. Onion seed from Connecticut and Michigan is considered the best, and fetches the highest price in the market.

CENTURIES ago such an animal as a rat was positively unknown in Europe The Latin had no word for rat. But when the crusaders came back from the East, with them besides prisoners of war came the black rat, which was a very fierce little animal and very destructive.

During the time of Napoleon, Russia introduced with its armies the brown rat. This specie was even more warlike than the black one and they soon began to fight and the black rat was finally almost exterminated. And now such a thing as a black rat is seldom heard of.

TALKS WITH GIRLS.

CONDUCTED BY
COUSIN MARION.

This is the last summer month, my dears, and I am sure you are all glad of it and will welcome the cool weather of autumn even if it does make you a little older than you were. As between two discomforts I think that hot weather is personally more disagreeable than old age. You haven't tried both yet but you will have done so by and by and will find I am right. However, I talk too much and must get to work.

The first on the list is Cousin Mary K., of South Heart, N. D., who asks if a girl of fifteen should wear a shirt waist and I answer yes; and also yes as to her dancing if she does not go to dances regularly as a young lady.

Lena, Brazil, Ind.—Forms of address on different occasions of meeting cannot be given. Say what your feelings prompt you to say, even if it is not the most elegant form.

Ruth, Fremont, Neb.—It is not impolite to refuse a man's arm, if you do it politely. (2) Better let moles alone. (3) If you don't believe in dancing say so, politely.

Belle, Mahaffey, Pa.—Men should not smoke in the presence of ladies, except with their permission. (2) Sunshine, exercise and dieting are the best remedies for muddy complexions.

Gretchen, Aspinwall, Va.—Yes, you may be as ladylike in a hammock as in the parlor. (2) It is correct to ask the young man to walk home with you from church, if he is talking to you after the service. You may also ask him to go with you to the orchard for fruit. (3) 10.30 is a good hour for the young man to leave, and you can tell him that is your hour.

House Leak, Montgomery, Okla.—Be careful about the young man your parents object to and forget the one who doesn't care for you. (2) You may go with a young man at night if he is all right.

Unknown, Nashville, Tenn.—There is no way of getting what you want except to advertise for it, and not much chance then.

Miss F., Mahaffey, Pa.—It is proper to ask a young man to dine with you. Yes, the man may take you home from church without taking you there, but it is not customary to do so from "entertainments."

Blue Eyes, Burr Oak, Mo.—An engaged man is under almost as many obligations as if he were married.

Inquirer, Norway Lake, Minn.—You will have to wait a little while and find out whether the young man loves you or your sister. They don't always know themselves at first.

Laura, Stillwater, Ok.—Sleeping car berths are comfortable for one person only, unless the other is a child. Wear a wrapper, not a nightgown. The porter will look after your comfort.

Delia Dell, Muscatine, Ia.—You must ask your men friends to call. (2) Don't write to men you do not know. (3) You should have asked the young man why he did not keep his engagement. (4) Don't marry before you are twenty-five. (5) Make your home attractive to people and they will come to see you.

Maud, Reed, Va.—You ask me nineteen questions and how can I ever answer that many if the others are to be answered? Please begin with one.

Black and Blue, Glade Spring, Va.—Unless properly introduced you should not receive the young man. (2) Don't speak to any kind of men you do not know. (3) If people are talking about you and your cousin, he should stop his attentions for propriety's sake. (4) Don't write to the young man your parents object to.

E. H., Gloversville, N. Y.—Wash your hands in oatmeal or corn meal and wear undressed kid gloves at your work and at night, and your hands will be soft.

Flirt, Nardin, O. T.—You are not sufficiently considerate of the young man's feelings. (2) Electric shocks at the touching of hands are dangerous things. (3) The color of the eyes does not make happy marriages. (4) They say girls should not whistle, but I don't know why. (5) Winking the eye at any one is exceedingly vulgar.

Whip-poor-will, Alexandria, N. Y.—If the young man is in every way worthy marry him and take the chances on your parents' forgiveness. But be sure he is worthy.

Maude and Idell, Amelia, La.—Ask all the questions you please, but only one or two at a time.

Girlie, Cheshire, Mass.—Home is a good place to stay of evenings. Make it pleasant for people to meet you there. (2) The lady speaks first. (3) Chaperones are not necessary. Follow the custom of the place.

Majorilaine, Jackson, Mich.—You could wear almost any color becomingly, but blues I think would be best. (2) Thank you for the pleasant messages you send.

Kate, Staplehurst, Neb.—Have as little as possible to do with a jealous disposition. (2) Yes, you may ask for friendship hearts.

K. B., Oshkosh, Wis.—I have some very silly cousins, but you are quite the silliest, not to know that it is sarcasm for the silliest when I tell a cousin that it is customary for ladies to accept as their friends the men who have insulted them. Do you think you could see through a millstone if there was a hole in it?

Daisy, Prospect, Pa.—"We won't go home till morning" is the usual rule of country parties. (2) A gentleman may call on Sunday night or remain after church.

Tearful, Santa Barbara, Cal.—All the chances are that if you marry the young man who drinks and plays the races you will always regret it. My advice to you is to wait five years, and by no means to elope.

Addie Williams, Karlirk. Neb.—It is not advisable that Catholics and Protestants marry unless with a perfect understanding of all the requirements. As you are a Protestant and you are undecided between the two young men, you had better choose the one of your own religious belief, unless the other will agree to be married by a Protestant clergyman.

Scotty, San Diego, Cal.—Some very nice ladies drink beer in the presence of gentlemen, but it is better not to. (2) Give the minister your picture if he is serious in his intentions.

Blanche, Flat Rock, Ind.—Yes, you should marry if you love the man. If you are engaged to him kissing is permissible. (2) Engaged couples usually arrange the details you ask about to suit themselves.

E. A., Ash Grove, Mo.—The man writes first. (2) Ask your escort in if it is not later than ten o'clock. (3) Yes, a young man may take you home from an entertainment where he has met you for the first time, if you have no other company.

There dears, all your questions are answered either directly or indirectly, or where you asked such questions as I have answered over and over again, and I shall stop with all sorts of good wishes until we meet again in September. The Lord be with you.

GRUESOME MERCHANDISE.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

TRADE in human skeletons—surely a very grim and grisly species of merchandise—seems to be developing in new directions, and nowadays one may spend a great deal of money, if he be morbidly inclined, upon a variety of articles of "bigotry and virtue" made up from the osseous framework of his fellow man. Indeed, it is surprising how much imagination has been exercised in devising gruesome products of this character.

For $14 as advertised, one may buy a skull and cross-bones, "beautifully white," the top of the cranium being separate and lined with gold-leaf. But for only $2 more one can purchase a skull with luminous eyes, the sockets containing two miniature incandescent lamps. This is worked by an electric battery, the jaw being moved at will by concealed mechanism.

A "skeleton rider"—a human skeleton mounted astride of a rearing skeleton horse, on an oak pedestal—costs $325. The right hand of the rider bears a long lance, and "special attention is given to the correct anatomical posing of this instructive group." Cheaper, but still very desirable, is a Charlotte Corday, got up in a manner that would certainly have been most pleasing to the young lady if she had been able to see herself thus represented. It consists of a human skull shut behind the iron bars of a prison window of masonry, the skeleton hands clutching the bars as in the celebrated painting of the French heroine. It can be fastened to the wall and operated from a distance, the skull being made to nod at will, "Ghastly and effectively," the advertisement says, and presumably this does not overstate the fact. With a battery to work the mechanism, it costs only $50.

Such elaborate contrivances as these are used almost exclusively by secret societies. Another one of the kind is a Flying Mercury—a male skeleton, "best quality," poised on one foot and bearing a torch in the raised arm. No support is visible, the figure appearing as if in full flight. The torch is practical, and can be arranged to give light.

Under the head of "human bric-a-brac" are included a number of articles of every-day use composed of people's bones which have been dispensed with by their former owners. There are canes made in part from thigh-bones, umbrella-handles for the "upper third of the humerus," and smoking sets, likewise "entirely osteological." A novel style of piano lamp is a complete skeleton, kneeling, supporting a handsome brass or silver-gilt apparatus. Carving sets and writing sets are likewise composed of various parts of human framework, and the non-superstitious persons may even buy three dice of like material for only $4.

TO ACQUIRE GOOD HAIR.

Every man and woman should know how to acquire and retain a good head of hair. Many preparations for the cure of dandruff, falling hair and premature baldness are advertised but generally they have but a temporary effect. They are compounded without knowledge of the cause. These troubles all come from a parasite in the roots of the hair. The cure and removal of this pest is accomplished by Cranitonic Hair Food, which not only preserves the hair and restores it to a natural color but feeds the growth and by killing the parasitical disease renders the scalp and hair healthy. The result is a new growth of strong, lusty hair. A small cake of shampoo soap for this purpose with directions will be sent prepaid to anyone writing to Cranitonic Hair Food Co., 526 West Broadway, New York City, if you will say you saw the offer in COMFORT.

How To Cure RUPTURE

DEAR READER:—It gives me much pleasure and satisfaction to write this little story, for it contains a new and wonderful method of curing rupture or hernia, and places before the afflicted words of hope and tidings of great joy.

It is not my intention to use medical words or terms for the purpose of confusing those who are not familiar with them. I am sure this would not be more valuable for using those technical terms which some use, for the sole purpose of making some ignorant one believe they possess extraordinary knowledge

I am not going to describe the many ways one may become ruptured. In the many years I have treated ruptures I have been told of more than a thousand different things that caused my patients' affliction. That you are ruptured, and that I can cure you, is the purpose for which this is written, and it will surely be a blessing, coming unawares to those who follow its teachings.

There are several kinds of rupture and they are named according to their location, the most common being Scrotal, Umbilical (navel) and Femoral. They are again divided into two classes as reducible or irreducible. The reducible is one that can be returned to its proper place within the abdomen. The irreducible is one that cannot be returned. The last named is caused by going without a truss, but mostly by using some poor and ill-constructed one.

RUPTURED.

There are many people who are ruptured and don't know it. They will have at times a slight pain in the lower part of the abdomen. If they do much lifting or straining work it grows worse and will at times get so bad they think they have an attack of colic. They will take some medicine for colic, lie down, and in many cases the pain will disappear, because whatever was out returns to its natural position. But in other cases the surgeon has to be called because the rupture has become strangulated. In some cases he succeeds in reducing it, in others a surgical operation is necessary, and with others after hours of agony death only gives relief.

The best time to attend to a rupture is when it is small, perhaps in some cases no larger than an acorn. Many who have small ruptures say, "It is only a small one, does not give me any trouble, no need to bother about that."

SMALL RUPTURE DANGEROUS Let me say right here that to neglect the small rupture is one of the most terrible mistakes possible, for every minute life is in danger of immediate and painful death by strangulation, for the opening is so small that it only allows one intestine to come down. It then requires great force or pressure to move the contents and in many cases it becomes constricted which is very apt to prove fatal or require a painful surgical operation at a great cost of time and money.

HAVE YOU IT CAN BE CURED Perhaps you have suffered for years with rupture. If so, I have no doubt but you have tried many trusses and methods of cure, expended many dollars and always the same result—failure. Perhaps you have been told by some one or it has been spoken in your presence and you believed it because you never took time to think about it, that "rupture could not be cured." Just think a minute of what is going on in your body. Two agencies at work, one constantly tearing you down, the other building you up or repairing, and as long as your vitality is good the repairing force keeps you in perfect health. Suppose you broke your arm, never had it set, or the proper appliance used to make it reunite and heal, the result would be that you would always have a broken arm. But you do have the proper attendance and care, and your arm in a short time is well again. So your rupture will heal if given the same chance—viz.: retain everything in a natural position the same as if there was no rupture and nature will do the rest. But the facts are:—you became ruptured, experienced very little or no pain, and you put off from day to day using the correct appliance needed to assist nature in its work. You needed a truss that would hold under every condition the strain from the injured part until it was healed, and strong enough to perform its work again. You need an appliance that HOLDS AND HEALS WHILE YOU WORK.

HOW COULD THIS HEAL The trusses that have been placed on afflicted ones in the past were constructed on the wrong principle and are now things of the past. In their day some were considered good and in some cases gave partial relief. They would hold one day and perhaps the next day would let the hernia out many times. In fact never two days alike because they were not self-adjusting. Some thought when the elastic was introduced, "here is a perfect truss at last," but they soon found out their mistake. They place all dependence on elastic webbing or belts which go around the body and they must be pulled or buckled tight enough so they are a torture, to bring the pads in position to bear on the rupture. Everyone knows that the sweat of the body will soon rot the elastic in the webbing, and so they must be continually stretching and giving out; never two days alike; consequently the intestines are being let out of their natural position, and never give the rupture a chance to heal. How can that kind of a truss cure a rupture? A rupture to be cured must be held securely in its natural position. It is probably a waste of time to tell you about old style trusses. You know it all. You know how you have suffered in warm weather from sweating and chafing. The belts and straps pulled up so tight over the galled parts that you would think, "I would rather die than suffer this any longer," and many, after repeated trials, unable to bear the torture any longer, are risking their lives and living in misery without a truss.

HOW TO CURE To effect a cure of hernia, all know that the hernial tumor or intestines must be held in an easy, comfortable and natural position, in fact to be in the same natural position that they would be in if there was no rupture. It has been my great fortune to have placed in my possession a new idea in the shape of what I may call a truss. Do not think it is one of those instruments of torture you have seen that has ropes, pulleys, elastics, etc. To compare mine with others would be like comparing the electric light with an old fashioned lamp. My appliance or truss stands out alone as a new idea, something far ahead of anything ever before placed upon a human being. A wonderful invention, holds with comfort everything in its proper, natural position, giving nature the chance to heal she has been waiting for. IT IS AS EASY TO WEAR AS A STOCKING, safe, simple, cleanly and durable.

CURED.

WILL LAST 100 YEARS IF NEEDED Cool and comfortable in warm weather, has no parts to chafe, does not absorb the foul odors of the body, always in place, always comfortable, always healing. It has no elastic webbing, no straps between the legs and no spring around the body. No matter what your position is, it never need changing.

YOU WORK WHILE IT HEALS No loss of time. Our appliance stands out alone, a new idea, PATENTED BY THE U.S. GOVERNMENT, and has been proven to be far in advance of any other appliance for the cure of rupture.

DOES IT DO THIS Does your truss hold you at all times? Is it comfortable, giving you a feeling of safety that you are all right? Is your rupture week by week growing smaller? If not, throw away that truss. Don't lose your health, perhaps your life, with such a contrivance. It is wrong in principle, wrong in construction, and may do a positive injury. In many cases the trusses are made and sold by persons who never saw a rupture. Belts, elastics, springs, and in fact everything that could be made, that some kind of a pad was fastened to, was put on to sufferers as a truss.

WHAT YOU WANT Is an appliance that holds everything in its natural position, SAFE, SURE, CLEANLY, HEALING, COMFORTABLE. So easy that you do not realize you are ruptured. You ask, "Is there such an appliance?" The answer is, "Yes! for I HAVE THAT APPLIANCE!" The inventor of this wonderful truss, the Rev. Jeremiah Hayden, who was chaplain of the 17th Maine Regiment, says:

THE PASTOR'S STORY "Finding myself ruptured, I sought advice of an elder brother who had the same trouble. He said, 'I have been ruptured for forty years, and have spent over $300 for trusses, and the one I have on now is the best one I ever had. It cost me $15 (it was an elastic truss) but it is breaking and I must get another.' On examination I found an elastic strap around him with every stitch of the webbing printed on his body, while the understrap that passed between his legs had chafed him so that he was red and sore. This led me to discover my truss, which is as EASY TO WEAR AS A STOCKING, and which ended all pain, danger and cost, and never needs repairing. I want to get it into the hands of my fellow-men who are suffering from this dangerous and painful infirmity, for I know it will be worth a hundred times its cost. I am broken down with kidney and heart disease, and I am in constant expectation of death. (82 years old.)' The thought has been constantly before me: an invention which has the power to relieve so much suffering should not be buried with me. As I am not able, I want you to take measures to introduce it to the world, and if this is accomplished, I shall feel that my life has been of value to sufferers. As I have reflected upon the miseries of millions without means of relief, and the dismal certainty of their growing worse, and considered that I have in my keeping a comfortable, sure fitting, never failing remedy, amply proven and tested in my own and other cases, and which, at a glance, common sense will appreciate, I feel that it would be a giant wrong to mankind to have this invention buried with me, for AS I VALUE MY HONOR IN THIS WORLD AND MY SOUL IN THE NEXT, I unhesitatingly declare that a failure in any instance is impossible." A truly most wonderful invention; a blessing to mankind. An article that will cure, because it will hold everything just right, in its natural position, which gives the rupture a chance to re-unite and heal.

CAN YOU DOUBT What more need be said than the minister's statement printed above? Does any one believe for a moment that Mr. Hayden would make a statement he did not believe true? Will you be benefited by my method? It costs so little and success is certain. Why will you drag out a miserable existence when the means of relief are at your command?

TERMS: NO CURE, NO PAY It is the perfect confidence I have in my method of cure that warrants me in adopting the above terms. Surely I have great faith in my way of treating rupture or I would never make the following proposition to you. It is a fair, honest offer that no other firm dare make, because they have not the goods to back it up. You will carefully fill up the Measure Blank with the answers to the questions asked thereon. We also ask you to sign our Special Order Blank. You will please send us those two blanks and the small sum stated on the Special Order Blank with your order. The reason I ask you to send this guarantee with the order is, there are so many people who are always writing for anything they can get for nothing. Many would write who are not ruptured. They know some one who is, and they want to get for nothing something they can sell the afflicted party for $10 or $15. There are others who have no gratitude in them; their object seems to be to get all they can for nothing and in no way ever think of repaying a favor or paying what rightfully belongs for them to pay. THIS I KNOW FROM ACTUAL EXPERIENCE. To keep such parties from troubling me, I have decided on the following plan: You are to send the two blanks before mentioned and the small amount stated thereon, the same to be held by us as a small guarantee of good faith. Upon receipt of same we at once send you by mail, all charges paid and safe delivery guaranteed, a truss, the same to be used by you. When cured you are to promptly send us $4.00 more and return our truss, which we only lend you. Many who get cured say they want to keep the truss. To all I will say that I will sell it at a fair price and charge according to the work done, and it will not be over $10. The terms I have offered are fair and liberal, no fair-minded person can say they are not, and I will not under any circumstances deviate from them.

Will you, after these plain and truthful statements, continue to suffer and risk your life by wearing an old style, imperfect truss? Dare you go without one knowing you are daily growing worse, and that within a short time you will become a total wreck? Dare you lay this aside before you give it a trial, which costs you nothing if you are not satisfied? Do you think it is a humbug? If we were frauds we would not ask such a small sum with the order; we would ask $5.00 or $10.00. A fraud never expects a second order, so they get all the first.

We can fit an infant, or a man or woman weighing 300 lbs. Fleshy ladies having navel ruptures will find it a great blessing. No hot bands around you. It is the only truss that can be worn by women and be clean and comfortable. Ruptured women who are pregnant can wear it and avoid many hours and days of misery. Don't put off ordering it. Do it today; tomorrow may be too late. What more need be said to convince you? We warrant A PERFECT FIT IN EVERY CASE.

SEE THE TESTIMONIALS Be sure to fill out the two blanks. The Sure-hold Truss fits all kinds of ruptures. In closing will say I have cured many who have had bad ruptures and can cure you if you will only let me. I can be the means of doing you much good, and hope to hear from you in the near future. If you wish the names of people in your own state who endorse our method, send postage and we will send you their names.

MY GUARANTEE The perfect confidence I have in my truss, and the knowledge I have from actual experience of its curing properties enables me to guarantee every truss. Your rupture may be small, or it may be one that only at times gives you little pain or trouble. Did you ever know a rupture that did not from month to month grow worse? Let me say right here that there is nothing so dangerous as a rupture. Nothing keeps a man or woman so near death, nothing causes so much trouble or the cause of so many surgical operations. The ways of Providence are wonderful. This advertisement may be one of its methods of warning, coming to you unawares, which if neglected means your death. Don't be deceived or have your mind changed by some one who has trusses for sale or who gets a commission by getting a truss for you. They will lose the money, so they will say, "Don't send for the Surehold Truss; it is so cheap it can't be good," and then they will offer to sell you something costing $5.00 and upwards, and say, "This is good because we ask a big price for it." The fact is they make so few sales that when they do find a customer they charge enough to keep themselves going until they get another victim to fleece. Just say to such people that the Surehold Truss is not sold, it is only loaned, and just as soon as you are cured I get the truss back and $4.00 more. I have thousands of patients, so it pays me. Ask others to let you have their goods on the same terms as I do, and I will warrant you will get some flimsy excuse.

A MAN CURED WHILE HE WORKED. DEAR SIR: I cannot find words to express my thanks. I tried many kinds and never one that would hold me. The Surehold holds me in all places and at all kinds of work, and I have never lost a day's time. I am cured entirely and have not had to wear a truss for many weeks. I have worked hard shoveling and wheeling coal; traveling up and down stairs at my work as watchman. Some nights I have put in more than a ton of coal. G. S. HOSLEY, Norwood, Mass. Granite St.

A WOMAN CURED AFTER 18 YEARS OF SUFFERING. AGE 61. DEAR SIR: I cannot say enough in favor of your truss. Please accept my most sincere thanks for the benefit I have received. I have not worn a truss for three months now. I had previously worn a truss day and night for over 18 years. I have worked hard all the fall drying fruit and doing the duties of the household. I heartily wish that every man, woman or child who has suffered as I did would be convinced that your truss will cure rupture. I wish you long life and prosperity and an eternal life in the future. Yours truly, MARTHA A. DAVIS, Diamond, Ark.

A BOY CURED MY BOY. SIR: Your truss has cured my boy when no other would, in the time you said it would. I am more than thankful to you. Every word you said was true. No need of any child suffering when they can be cured so easily.

MRS. MARY YARNELL, Middleton, Ohio.

CONDUCTED BY REGULUS.

THE sun in its progress through the Zodiac passes the first point of the sign Libra, crossing the celestial equator at about twelve minutes past seven o'clock in the morning of the 23rd of September, this year, Washington time. This constitutes what is known as the Autumnal Equinox.

At that moment the middle degree of Libra will be on the eastern horizon and the 19th degree of Cancer will be culminating. The sun, moon and Mercury will be above the horizon in the 12th house: Jupiter and Herschel will be in the 2d house, Saturn in the 3rd opposed to Neptune in the 9th, and Mars and Venus will be in the 10th. Venus being ruler of the ascending sign Libra, is ruler of the scheme. She is in the 10th house in sextile with the Ascendant. The indications of the figure are in the main good, though the continued prominence of Mars, the god of war, now in the 10th house, renews the promise of martial activity not as conducive to peace and harmony as could be wished. The warlike spirit is dominant and if it does not produce actual conflict of arms involving our nation it will cause more then usual lawlessness and violence of man to man. The great planetary bodies being inimically disposed with Neptune in the 9th house or the house of Religion, is indicative of great disturbances among religious sects or denominations. Neptune and Saturn that have been moving in opposition for many months while Jupiter and Herschel have been so closely conjoined, have excited the religious mind of the world. Much schism and discord have been created in established churches; new theories have been advanced, new doctrines born, unusual antagonism excited between religious sects, arousing the fanatical elements of religion in the world, which in the past has nearly always been attended with bloodshed and massacre. The Lunation or new moon which forms in the afternoon of the day of this Autumnal Equinox falls in close square with Saturn and Neptune and emphasizes the indications that this year 1900 will be a momentous epoch in the religious history of the world.

Mars so actively placed in the figures for both the Equinox and Lunation, for our own country, is a promise that our nation will not be exempt from tasting some of the mischievous effects of these planetary combinations. Our ruling authorities will have many knotty problems to solve, and cares of State will rest heavy upon their shoulders. Mars will keep up a state of excitement in our political world and we may reasonably look for some disorderly outbreaks of a political character, particularly in our southern localities. Mars being in the 10th cautions us also to have care of bad fevers and eruptive diseases in the south.

CELESTIAL CALENDAR FOR SEPTEMBER, 1900.

SEPTEMBER. 1—Saturday. The noon hours are the best ones in this day for transaction of general business and especially for dealings with banks and other monied institutions, also for moderate purchases of merchandise for trade or use; the morning is not as favorable as the later hours and correspondence and matters of account are likely to give annoyances; don't take the morning for contract making pertaining to literary undertakings, and letter writing is best deferred until noontime. The latter hours of the day are decidedly adverse for any important venture, being likely to bring disappointment from any matter then begun. The day is not fortunate as a birthday anniversary, prompting great care and watchfulness of both health and circumstances for several months to come; especially is this true for persons born about the 1st days of March, June, September, or December of past years. The time for such persons is quite likely to bring realization of disappointment from earlier ventures and to baffle and defeat progress of matters in hand. Ladies, so born, are likely to be in the midst of domestic or family infelicities; and if married to be experiencing conjugal dissensions, sadness or bereavement in the marital relations or through male relatives; influences tend to cause discord among lovers having such birthdays if they do not really rupture engagements of ladies so born who have not yet assumed the matrimonial yoke.

2—Sunday. A very favorable Sabbath day encouraging lofty sentiment, sober contemplation and reflection and effective religious discourse.

3—Monday. Give preference to the early hours for the most important moves but as the noon is past do not expect much progress in thy several pursuits; have no bargains in houses or lands, nor be concerned with building or excavating; use the late evening and night hours for protracted mental efforts and conducting literary work of consequence.

4—Tuesday. Begin early and crowd all thine affairs to the utmost; make application for favor or advantage from public men, large corporations and all persons in authority; as the evening draws nigh let more than usual care be had for avoidance of bad fires, especially in business localities; thieves will be unusually active.

5—Wednesday. This day is poor for the literary and scientific pursuits as well as for artistic matters, music, painting, and trade in decorative wares; embarrassments are likely to come to editors, mathematicians, civil engineers, surveyors, lawyers and judges especially if born about the 23rd of February, 29th of May, or 25th of August, of past years.

6—Thursday. Begin the day early and urge all undertakings of a scientific, literary or monetary nature and press all general business until the late afternoon; seek favor from principal officers of large corporations, government officials, and bankers during the middle hours of the day.

7—Friday. Use this day fully for buying or selling real estate or for having dealings with those engaged in the laborious occupations; deal in such commodities as coal, wood, lumber, agricultural products, lead and metalic ores; do not have any business transaction concerning patents, patented goods, copyrights or trademarks.

8—Saturday. Let speculators remain quiet during this day if they wish to avoid entanglements and losses, and very important commercial transactions are best deferred a few hours; make no contracts and be very careful in the use of the pen; literary efforts are likely to be laborious and prove very unsatisfactory. The intellectual classes are in general under a ban for a few days and enterprises of such character now begun are not likely to be successful or profitable.

9—Sunday. A very fair Sabbath day until the evening, especially conducive to mental activity and voluble and aggressive utterances.

10—Monday. Improve the early morning hours for thy transactions in the fine arts and dealings in artistic and decorative goods; use the forenoon for dealings with public officers or managing authorities or superintendents in great corporations or upon large public works; solicit favor from railway officials and persons of prominence noted for eccentricity of conduct or habit. A word of caution is here noted for persons born about the 5th of January, 6th of June, 8th of July, or 6th of December, of past years, as such persons are just now passing some troublesome and exciting conditions; let them have care of getting in the way of harm from machinery, fire or vicious animals; they should be slow to anger and very deliberate in judgment and action and keep out of controversy and dispute to the best of their ability.

11—Tuesday. A fractious morning inviting patience and cautioning against haste or excitement of mind; have no surgical operation performed; be prudent in diet, avoiding stimulants and intoxicants; have no transactions about drugs, chemicals, fire-arms, metals or machinery. Use the afternoon for real estate dealings and attending to plumbing, excavation, building and repairing houses.

12—Wednesday. The middle hours are the best for most matters, though the day has but little to recommend it; literary and artistic matters are adversely affected in the forenoon; avoid the aged in the evening.

13—Thursday. One of the best days of the month; urge all correspondence and literary matters generally; sign writings of all kinds; deal in metals, machinery, cattle, chemicals and drugs and press all the mechanical trades and inventions; scientific and literary men are favored greatly and the nice avocations will be successful; dealers in household goods and artistic manufactured wares are fortunately influenced and if their individual nativities likewise promise advantage they should enter upon their principal ventures in life.

14—Friday. Look out for the pennies on this day, as conditions tend to wasteful expenditures and conduce in losses; urge the musical and artistic engagements and employ taste in all directions.

15—Saturday. Conflicting conditions prevail on this day; give no offence to thy superior or employer nor seek advantage from persons in authority; do not begin any great commercial or literary undertaking.

16—Sunday. Indifferent and passive; a good day for complete rest.

17—Monday. Beware of very flattering promises in the schemes or enterprises presenting themselves on this day; watch the finances and be not extravagant in expenditures.

18—Tuesday. Due caution being had against rashness of action or judgment, let all the energies be put forth for pursuit of business; the day is a peculiarly energetic and vigorous one and should be fully improved.

19—Wednesday. Let the forenoon be specially improved for the pursuit of all general business, but particularly all the elegant occupations and the fine arts; deal in musical merchandise, dramatic appurtenances, dress goods, jewelry, etc.; the afternoon is less commended.

20—Thursday. This day encourages association with the aged and the active pursuit of all general business, but preferences may be given to dealings in real estate, boots and shoes, dyes, wool, lead, coal, lumber, and all classes of building material.

21—Friday. Avoid money speculations at this time and invest not thy means in goods for trade; keep the purse strings securely drawn and be watchful against needless expenditures.

22—Saturday. Avoid thy landlord on this day; nor have any dealings with contractors, miners, farmers and persons engaged in the dirty avocations. Engage not in any important matter; no permanent advantage will result from undertakings commenced this day. If this is the anniversary of thy birthday or if born the 20th of March, 21st of June, or 22d of December, of past years, thou shouldst not be surprised that more than usual disappointment or tribulations come in thine affairs at about this time. Such persons should be temperate in habit and circumspect in all business transactions; let them particularly avoid the use of stimulants, too free living, indulgence in follies or needless expenditures; cramp and other stomach troubles are to be guarded against; such persons engaged in business should see to it that they give no cause for business ruptures, and doing the best they can, be content even though prosperity be not so great. They should not now begin any new or important undertaking if they would have it succeed or benefit themselves.

23—Sunday. Not particularly promising for a Sabbath day; though the first half of the day is noted for its increased activity and vigor; avoid the aged in the afternoon.

24—Monday. A bright and cheering day which REGULUS commends to his friends for the beginning of any important ventures; seek money accommodations and speculate if thy nativity likewise favor in this respect; literary affairs are prospered and the elegant pursuits are aided; travel, remove, and crowd all undertakings.

25—Tuesday. Do not speculate or loan thy money or credit; those subject to apoplectic troubles should have care at this time.

26—Wednesday. Be master of thy temper in the morning hours nor have transactions with persons in the mechanical callings or who pursue their avocations by use of firearms, fire or sharp instruments; the day is a vigorous one and may be fully employed in every honorable pursuit.

27—Thursday. Do not choose this for thy wedding day or for courtship; engage in no pursuit of pleasure except in thine own house; art and music meet embarrassment to-day; seek no redress for grievances from public officials or persons in authority.

28—Friday. Give preference on this day to the transaction of business with dealers in hardware, cutlery, metals, glassware, brass and iron work, chemicals and electrical apparatus, also with persons in the ingenious and mechanical trades.

29—Saturday. Conditions are somewhat conflicting though in general the day is a good one for all honorable pursuits; beware of usurers and avoid dealings with public men or government officials.

30—Sunday. A superior day for improvement of the mind and proper appreciation of the merits of artistic work and the elegant in literature; the evening is less propitious and will give disappointments and disagreeable experiences with aged persons.

What Are the Chinese Boxers?

CHINESE FOREIGN OFFICE.

HE above question is asked on all sides now that the name is so frequently in public print; and while there is a general idea that these are Chinese rebels, very few people can really tell what is meant by the name and the origin of this most formidable organization which has caused the present fanatical uprising against all Christian people, and is leading to an unprecedented massacre of white people, and which seems to be the beginning of a general war that will bring about the final dismemberment of the Chinese Empire.

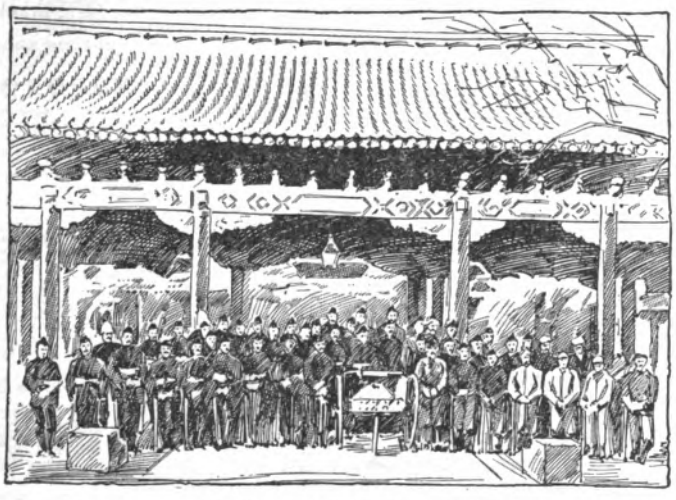
The present uprising is a repetition of the many bloody insurrections which have taken place from time to time in the Chinese Empire. The celestial empire is a centralized government, and having to rule over a population of four hundred million people should be very strong; but on the contrary has always been weak. It is this fact which from time immemorial has caused these frequent uprisings and especially uprisings brought about by secret organizations such as the Boxers. The reason for the strength of the present movement is that it receives the tacit encouragement of the Dowager Empress, who is really at the head of the Chinese government.

The conservative spirit of China has, until recently, prevented the building of railroads, and there were only five hundred miles in operation last year; so that the entire carriage of merchandise in this vast empire, the central part of which is equal to half the United States in territory, was done by water ways and the labor of coolies. Tens of thousands of junks and other Chinese boats of light draught distribute foreign and domestic commerce through the water ways of the empire. At the highest points of navigation these in turn are taken by coolies and either carried in packages slung at two ends of a bamboo pole, or by the Chinese wheelbarrow, and carried still further to the interior. In the same manner all goods for foreign export are brought to the sea-coast.

LI HUNG CHANG.

The Chinese government has granted, since its first American concession, very many concessions and rights throughout the empire to different favored nations. While keeping strictly to themselves, they allow territory outside of cities upon which the foreigners build their factories, houses, etc. The whole city of Hong Kong is an English concession, and is the great shipping point of English goods. Outside of Pekin, and close to the great wall of China are the concessions on which are built foreign houses of the legations. The water ways and roads, of which we have spoken, are infested with Chinese pirates and banditti, who swoop down upon inoffensive merchantmen and kill and plunder them and then hide until the affair is blown over. This system, while condemned by the government itself, is winked at by local officials who generally are supposed to reap a portion of the spoils. It is not a dangerous undertaking, therefore, for any set or class of these robbers to band themselves together for any definite purpose, and as communication is very slow in the empire, the doings of any local company or organization, especially where in collusion with the local authorities, would be a long time in reaching the capital. In previous years there have existed in China many organizations, known as the Triads and the Teente Brotherhoods, The Heaven and Earth Society, The Great Dragon Society, The Sect of the Water Lily, The Flood Family, The Company of the Queen of Heaven, The Society of Heaven, Earth and Man, The Society of Tea, and numerous other organizations all directed against either local or general government, or more often against the incursions of foreigners and the concessions granted them by the Chinese government. In some cases these societies have grown to tremendous proportions and have nearly succeeded in their attempts to usurp the general government. The most successful among these was the Triad Society, which was formed to destroy the Tartar influence and very nearly overthrew the entire empire.

The nearest approach that we have to such organizations in our own country would be such bodies as the Free Masons or Odd Fellows; and the Boxers are typical of the most successful of the Chinese secret organizations. They are divided into lodges and have common signs and passwords known only to themselves; have certain methods of locating each other, and recognize peculiar methods of putting dishes and food upon the tables; of wearing garments and saluting passers by. They hold their meetings generally in the dead of night, and in secluded and hidden places; and one of their customs at each meeting is to draw blood from their bodies, mix it with water and drink to each other and pledge vengeance against their enemies. The flag which has been adopted by this body bears the Chinese words meaning "Up with the Ch'ing Dynasty and down with the Foreigner."



They are known in their own country as The Big Sword Society and were organized in large numbers in the Shantung Province, but have recently spread rapidly; and from the present reports in newspapers it would be inferred that the organization is now very general throughout the Flowery Kingdom.

The Chinese government could undoubtedly stamp out such a movement, as it has done in former times; but the great game of politics enters into the present movement to a greater degree than has ever appeared in any movement against foreigners. The Empress desires to restore the ancient forms and prestige of the throne and to expel all foreigners; but she realizes the great danger that there is in attempting to stop the Russian movement on the North. She dares not fight with that country, and yet knows that with the protection of Russia she can defy Germany, England and France on the coast line. The Boxers are especially bitter against the foreign missionaries of both the Catholic and Protestant churches, and they are encouraged by the Buddhists and their priests. The foreigner, viewed from the Chinese standpoint, is nothing but a barbarian and incapable of entering into his ideas of civilization. Every encouragement is given throughout the entire empire to increase the hatred of all foreigners, and this has been going on for years until the Chinese population is a seething mass of hatred and desire for vengeance.

The Boxers have numerous superstitions and one in connection with the drinking of each other's blood is that they become immortal, which they prove by hacking themselves with swords to show that they have no pain. It is generally supposed in European countries that the Chinese are poor soldiers, and such is the fact, as they would generally rather run than fight; but this is partly accounted for from the fact that they have no patriotism or desire to die for their own country. They are far, however, from being cowards; and while the ordinary soldier has no ambition or desire to defend his country, the Boxer is a fanatic who believes himself appointed to restore ancient China and to exterminate the western barbarism. Aroused in this way, the Chinese are capable of wonderful endurance and fortitude, and seem to have absolutely no fear of death or personal injury. While we might not fear the Chinese soldier, the Boxer, believing in his own immortality and that his is a heaven-sent mission, becomes a foe to fear.

The great dependence of the foreigners is on Li Hung Chang, who it will be remembered, visited this country a few years ago. He is a man of tremendous strength, bodily and mentally. Although nearly eighty years old, he stands over six feet tall, and is mentally and physically as vigorous as ever. He has been the leader of the progressive party in China and in recent years has not stood well with the Empress Dowager, whose plans he often opposed. It is hoped through his instrumentality that peace will be brought about. He has made a wonderful record in his own country and especially in its relations with foreign powers, and through his efforts peace may be restored to the empire. Nearly the last official act that he performed while he was in power before being deposed a few years ago, was the abolishing of the greatest organization in China and the forerunner of the present Boxers.

The barbaric slaughter of the German minister to China and the detention of all foreigners in Pekin surrounded by a fanatical horde of Boxers, whose forces were alternated by the imperial soldiery caused the leading of relief columns composed of soldiers and sailors from all the European countries to go to their relief. The story of the fighting and failures has already appeared in the newspapers, and is daily changing. At the time this article was written, the last news that had been heard was that the forces were besieged in the English legation at Pekin, a picture of which is shown in our illustration. At the same time the magnificent battleship Oregon, which had been sent to the relief of Americans, has just been successfully floated from a rock upon which she struck, and saved from what was apparently a total loss. It was in front of the Chinese foreign office that the fanatics bore down the German ambassador and his servants and literally hacked them to pieces.

THE BRITISH LEGATION AT PEKIN.

Many will ask why the name Boxers is given to this society. The exact reason cannot be told, but is probably associated with the idea that one of the names of the society is Manhood, Friendship and Fists. This is one of their most popular names, and undoubtedly from the last word was derived the general appellation by which they are known.

Our illustrations are of the principal scenes in the present uprising. The foreign office of the Chinese, shown in the initial, is reported destroyed. In front of this the German Ambassador, Baron C. August von Ketteler, was brutally hacked to pieces with his suite. In the British legation, shown in the other picture, the remaining foreigners were besieged and kept up their desperate fight against the hordes of fanatical Chinese murderers for a number of days.

Students of political and foreign questions have long realized that the situation in China was fraught with the greatest dangers. The withholding of the spoils of war from Japan by the Russian government, and the encroachments of European governments, the mapping out of spheres to be absorbed in case of the dismemberment of China, have lead to constant jealousies and war preparations, so that the thoughtful student has longlooked for troubles in the far East which might eventuallly bring about the general European war which has been so long threatened and dreaded. The present fanatical uprising will be put down after a tremendous loss of life and great slaughter of the celestials; but no one can foresee the consequences of such a war. The importance of America's possessions in the far East is so well known and so well understood that she cannot be a mere spectator, but must take her part of the responsibilities as one of the first powers of the earth; but her position is so different from that of the European countries that all that will be needed is conservative action and a desire to be just and honest in her dealings with the Orientals to make hers a commanding position, no matter what the events may bring forth.

BARON VON KETTELER.

While it would be impossible to give the latest details of the revolt, which have already appeared in the daily papers and have been read by every one, still it perhaps would do no harm to point out some of the features of the campaign so that in reading hereafter a better conception may be had of what it all means. China is divided into two parts, North and South China, and it is the northern part which gave rise to the Boxer rebellion, from which it has spread and at the present time is probably very far into the whole empire.

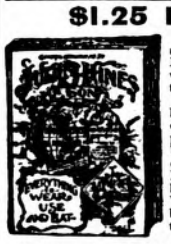
It must always be remembered in reading that the sources of information, except on the few coast cities, are in the hands of the Chinese. They are notably a crafty race, and consider it no dishonor to spread false reports where they think it is to their advantage. This characteristic, which is found in almost every Chinaman, becomes a national sin; and in diplomacy it is almost impossible to feel that any nation is being treated with truth or directness.

The empire is extremely wealthy, and is populated by a horde of Mongolians variously estimated from 400,000,000 to 500,000,000 souls. The people are patient and industrious to the highest degree. It must not be thought that the Chinese as a whole are ignorant or barbarians; on the contrary they have the very highest kind of cultivation, and education extends among them may be to a greater degree than in the Caucasians, although of a different age and different period. It can only be said that their civilization resembles very much the civilization of the world 3000 or 5000 years ago, and the now obsolete Egyptian civilization, which in its time represented the highest civilization of the world, is very similar to the highest forms of Chinese civilization at the present day. They are largely followers of the doctrines of Confucius, although Buddhism extends throughout the empire, and it is owing to the fanatical appeals of the Buddhist priests that many of the atrocities of the present rebellion are due.

At this writing it is impossible to definitely state the progress which has been made by rebellion. The reports are contradictory, being published and denied day after day; but it seems comparatively certain that all the Europeans who were in Pekin on July 1st were massacred, and it would seem that those who were captured by the Chinese were submitted to the most horrible barbarities and torture. In fact the details, comprising as they do the shooting of women and children to prevent their capture by the Chinese, the tortures of the wounded and similiar barbarisms, make the details of this revolt too sickening to be considered.

The tragedy of Pekin has spread a feeling of retaliation throughout the civilized world, and armies from all parts of the Christian domain are being prepared and hurried to the scene of the catastrophe. The present intention is to send 22,000 Americans, and already the comparatively small number there have done remarkable work in connection with the allied armies. One of the most serious developments in the situation develops that the Boxers are coming South with many regiments released by the fall of the Pekin legations to arouse the southern provinces; and that an imperial edict was sent forth in the early part of July commanding all the viceroys and governors to immediately commence war against the foreigners, and declaring that officers of all ranks who refuse to obey would be decapitated. The gravity of such a situation cannot be fully comprehended.

Another thing to be considered in reading about this war is that the Chinese have been preparing for war against the Caucasians for the last three years, and the amount of ammunition and modern equipment which has been poured into the empire during that time is almost incredible. German officers have also been putting the Chinese army on a war basis ever since the Japanese war, and with countless number of young Chinamen to draw upon, the very numbers make them formidable. Many people will underestimate the strength of China, relying on the fact that the Japanese whipped them so easily in the late war; but it should be remembered that in that case Japan showed a naval superiority very early, and that the entire fighting was confined to a small peninsula from which the Japanese drove the Chinese with great loss.



As has been pointed out before, China has little or no railroad communication, and is an immense country, the interior of which is hardly known by Europeans. The European settlements are largely on the coast, and the capturing and holding of any number of these coast cities would not mean the subjugation of the Chinese empire. It would be very much as if there were no railroad communication in the United States, and an invading army should take Portland, Boston and New York. It is easy to imagine how impossible it would be to subjugate the United States in such a case, especially if the population of this country were three or four times as large as it is now. The proposition confronting Christendom is the most serious that has appeared for centuries. No better saying upon the situation at the present time can be given than in the words of Robert Pacey Moon, M. P.:

"The British government, it may be taken for granted, will not declare war on China simply because that is confirmed which has long been expected. Since Her Majesty's Ministers have not held the dynasty responsible for the foreign colony's peril, they cannot logically hold the dynasty responsible for the massacre. The question of guilt or innocence must be determined before retribution commences. If it is certain that Chinamen fought for our people in these last awful days in Pekin, we must not include them in our scheme of vengeance. Therefore, confirmation of the rumors of massacre has not changed the government's purpose, except to intensify it.

"Two alternatives confront the allies. They are forced to crush the reactionaries or withdraw from China. They are forced to visit terrible retaliation on the murderers or to get out of the Empire and leave it to the superstition and savagery of the dark ages.

"The battle that is before us is really that of Christianity against heathenism. It will not be a battle of reason and argument but one of lead and steel. We shall see whether or not the Powers will waver. We shall see whether Kaiser Wilhelm, the Don Quixote of modern monarchs, will back his eloquence with his sword. We shall have a chance to judge whether the triple motive of vengeance, commercialism and zeal for Christ is enough to compel civilization to accept the bloody challenge of barbarism."

A STOWAWAY WAG.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY CHARLES E. BARNS.

Copyright, 1900, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

BARTON moved up the gangplank peering through the groups for a familiar face. It lacked half an hour of sailing time and the big Cunarder was thronged, ten God-speeders to every voyager.

"Let's see," he mused at last, drawing forth a card bearing the simple legend "16," "Harvey may be below wrestling with the stewards. I'll surprise him."

Down the gangway Tom slid along the mahogany after the manner of the confirmed sea-dog. Brushing now and then against busy, clean-jacketed stewards, he waded through various strata of tiffin-fumes, fresh paint and sea-bilge, at last standing before Stateroom 16. He rapped. As there was no response, Barton opened the door and passed in.

The room was empty—not even a handbag in sight. "So much the better," said the wag of the Players'. "I'll climb into the upper berth and pelt him with pillows when he comes. He's bound to be here in a moment." He climbed stealthily into the top bunk, closing his eyes, feigning sleep and listening. The donkey-engine pounded, the longshoremen groaned and swore under heavy loads, there was a scuffle of feet overhead, but every laden voyager passed Stateroom 16. Tom fell to reviewing the events of the evening before.

What a glorious send-off he had given his college friend, Harvey Pease, at the Players'! What viands, punch, song, repartee! Harvey had been three years in the mines of Brazil and was on his way to London, via New York, to complete a great deal. He was also, so Tom dimly suspected, bent on a matrimonial project—aye, this undoubting Thomas believed that the fair one in question was on this very ocean liner, else Harvey would have stayed over till the next sailing. How he would like to get just a glimpse of her! And so they had parted at four that morning, Tom promising to come down and wish his old comrade bon voyage. Strange! What could be keeping Harvey so late?——

Tom awoke with a gasp. He felt a mighty throbbing, first through his fevered temples, then through all this leviathan of the sea. Hark! No longer the clatter of the donkey-engines, the oaths of the longshoremen. Peering over the ledge, he saw that the stateroom was still empty. Then there came a slight rocking and his very heart stopped beating. Heavens! could it be possible? Floundering to the floor, Barton staggered to the porthole and clutched it, staring. Far over the horizon he saw the fading tip of Sandy Hook lighthouse.

In moments like these men of resources, particularly wags by profession, assume the aggressive through sheer staggering fright. Tom turned and caught a segment of his profile in the glass and saw that it was very pale. Instinctively both hands thrust into various pockets, disgorging. That discouraging search revealed a bunch of keys, a batch of rejected jokes, two unreceipted bills and forty-six cents in money. And he a stowaway, seven days from London! In his outstretched palms he weighed the paltry assets, setting his jaws.

"Brilliant!" he cut aloud through the salt spray. "The joker joked, the wag wagged, the wit outwitted." Then from sheer bravado, "I'll ring up the steward and order a b-and-s."

But with thumb on the push-button, Tom weakened. Stowaways did not usually do that sort of thing. They went to the captain, confessed all, got a blow and a kick and then nine days of coal-stoking. Any of that for the exquisite Tom Barton, crown jester of the Players'? Nay, nay. Now that he recalled what other stowaways did, he resolved to do the very opposite. He plumped down on the edge of the berth and grew philosophic.

Another difficulty. To be discovered as a stowaway meant to be laughed at all the way to London and back again. If there is anything that the professional joker shrinks from it is the laugh—on the lips of the other fellow. And yet he must be up and doing. That stateroom was growing unspeakably odious. The walls seemed closing in upon him. Oh, the terror—not of being discovered a stowaway—but of the joke being cabled back to the Players'! It would mean positive expatriation. At any rate he might steal out and run down the delinquent Harvey.

Guardedly Tom opened the door, peering out. Not a soul in sight. Through the chink he slipped, thrusting chin in air and with mustache a twist, bearded the deserted passageway. Again he drew forth the card, scanning it. This time it came up the other way and he read "91". How stupid! he had read the number upside down. By stealth Barton crossed amidships, scanning the white numbers. The door of Stateroom 91 was ajar. Tom peered through, and seeing the room empty, unhooked the door and passed in.

Several hampers and bags lay about, one lying open with a flask of cognac temptingly in sight. "This is where I get at least one joke on Harvey," he mused as he appropriated the flask. Then helping himself to two oranges and a handful of apricots, Tom stole back to safety unseen. In a quiet nook the wag stowaway ate and drank like one famished, then wandered down through the intricacies of the throbbing hulk, not yet trusting himself to the decks.

Safe as a murderer in a crowded tenement, Barton roamed about trying to dispel the conviction in his heart that he was a criminal, jollying everybody from the second-cabin cook, from whom he stole two buns, to the printer at work on the morrow's menu, whom he robbed of a steamer-cap and his afternoon tea. After that he felt so like a cigar that he stole back to Stateroom 91, helped himself to a handful and thus armed resolved at once to beard the upper airs.

At the head of the gangway Tom came face to face with a very charming young lady in handsome traveling gown. She turned to reprove his staring impertinence with a frown, but her face instantly lighted. "Oh, Mr. Montague!" she cried. "Is it really you?" Then to the elder behind her, "Aunty, dear, see! Here's our good friend Mr. Montague. Narragansett Pier, you remember. How lovely! Why, I did not not see your name on the passenger list—"

"Sh—h!" interposed the wag, seizing the profferred white hand as a man in a rushing torrent clutches a passing twig. "I'm—er—incog, don't you see."

"Another Wall street deal, or are you going over to play before the Queen?"

"Ah, I assure you, in my present mood I feel capable of anything, if only you are once more my mascot——"

"The same dear old Jack Montague, Aunty, dear! how lovely to meet again."

"But aren't you a trifle stouter, Mr. Montague?" The elder's voice was somewhat muffled with the handles of her jewelled lorgnette through which she surveyed him. "You must change your seat to our table. So many stupid people, eh, Adele?"

"Particularly one," shot back the scornful beauty. Then came reminiscences, half truths, guarded confidences and promises to meet later on deck aft, and Barton sauntered on.

With the sang froid of a true gamester, Tom passed into the smoking-room. There to his amazement he caught a glimpse of his friend Harvey Pease seated opposite a portly gentleman radiant in a brandy flush and diamonds. Cards were flying between them though no money was in sight. Tom watched them furtively a time, then stole away. The hour was inopportune and the place unseemly for a meeting. Into the depths again Barton descended, making more friends with the help of the stolen cigars. Toward evening he wandered near Stateroom 91 and was amazed to see emerge therefrom not his friend of years, but the latter's late adversary over the green cloth. Tom's heart leaped; then as the tall man swept amidships, Barton slipped into the little chamber.

What a blunder! He had robbed the wrong man. Furtively he restored the empty flask; but as he did so, the sight of a pack of cards gave him a stir. He took them up, examining closely. There was no doubt of it—they were marked. He drove further through the open portmanteau. The search revealed a professional crook-gambler's layout. Appropriating the cards, Barton slid back into Statercom 16, and spent four hours over the intricacies of marked backs, mastering them. Then he stole back, restored the cards and sauntered up to the deck aft.

The night was starless and the deck lights none too brilliant, but the ladies recognized the solitary wanderer, hailing him and making room for a steamer-chair between them. Then the word-sparring began, "Mr. Montague" evasive and glittering in generalities, gathering all while giving nothing. After something of an hour of this, the fair Adele leaned across and breathed to her elder, "Here he comes, Aunty, dear. Now do find some excuse, you know——"

Barton looked up at the solitary figure advancing. It was Harvey Pease! The latter glared at the interloper so pleasantly ensconsed, was presented to "Mr. Montague," and seated himself beside Adele. The Aunt grew confidential to Tom.

"Great bore. Met my niece on Brazilian steamer. Made desperate love and all that. Poor girl detests him. Do, Mr. Montague, do monopolize her as much as possible and make the dear girl's voyage less odious. You have such tact, y' know."

"Do my level best;" sighed Barton, and resumed his catapult of interrogatives.

By eleven o'clock that night, at which hour they parted, Tom had the family history of the Raleighs, of which honorable house Miss Adele was sole daughter and heiress, up even to the threshold of the skeleton-closet; for the aunt, a perfect crypt of reminiscence and family adoration, gave all as a school girl confiding her first love-affair. For an hour more Barton sat and smoked the other man's cigars, then sauntered below, pausing at the blinds of the smoking-room to spy out Harvey Pease once more in the meshes of the made-up southron. "Harvey is playing two hard games against heavy odds," he mused as he turned unseen into Stateroom 16.

It was a sleepless night, and Barton turned out early, nor returned till late. During the day he roamed through the internal economics of the sea-behemoth, managed to 'sample' enough of the cooks' dainties to stave off hunger, and went to the 'case' for the printer, aiding him in getting out 'The Tinpania Tidings,' a ship-bulletin issued at six-pence for the benefit of the Seamens' Home. That evening the printer worked his press overtime, for the 'Tidings' simply bulged with brilliancy, convulsing the ship and netting the Seamens' Home two pounds ten. That night Mr. Jack Montague spent three delicious hours on the deck aft in company with the Raleighs to the light of the dim stars and the threatening gleams from the pallid face and angry eyes of Harvey Pease, who, as usual, drowned defeat in love by a plunge in the ocean of hazard. On the morning of the third day of Tom's stowaway-ship the ship's printer resigned to him the editorial chair, reportorial staff, press and entire plant of 'The Tinpania Tidings,' and stewards fell over one another in their efforts to keep the brilliant feuilletonist, poet and wag in tea and biscuit. The 'Tidings' from henceforth simply staggered the ship and the Seamens' Home fund rolled up. Nightly the usual seance took place on the deck aft, 'Mr. Montague' keeping his promise to monopolize Miss Raleigh, noting with alarm, however, that Harvey Pease was growing hourly more moon-eyed and cadaverous. About midnight of the sixth, at the parting moment, Miss Raleigh gazed beseechingly into the calm eyes of the man of expedients, and said, "Mr. Montague, do you remember what you said to me under the elms just one year ago to-night?"

'Montague' trembled. "Ah, who could ever forget?" he murmured, vaguely.

"And though I refused you, for I did not know my own heart then, you said, 'Adele, dear, if ever you change your mind, speak only the word and I will come to you.' Do you remember, Mr.—J—Jack?"

"But much has happened since then, my dear Miss—Adele. All is changed——"

"Not in your heart, I hope—don't say that——"

"No, but in my fortunes. I have lost all my money, Adele—all!" He bent low with a painful simulation of a sob.

"Oh, is that all? Why, I thought you meant something serious. Besides, Jack, why worry about that? I have enough for both, you know that, don't you?"

The wag began to sweat blood. "See here!" he cried in despair. "I'm a scoundrel—an arrant criminal. Come down here where there are no eavesdroppers and I will tell you the whole thing." He drew her into the shadows, seizing her hand as if she would fly from him, and whispered penitently. "Miss Raleigh, I—I'm not 'Jack Montague' as you have all along thought, but I'm just plain Tom Barton, of New York; as good a man as Jack Montague or any other man, and I love you a thousand times more than he or any one else on earth ever loved you or ever will. There!"

Half an hour later Barton passed by the smoking-room just as the door flew wide and out into the night came Harvey Pease with the air of a whipped panther. Barton saw it all, and resolved to revenge Harvey on the gambler, taking his place at the green cloth opposite the crook, with a capital of forty-six cents, a bronze face and an intimate knowledge of marked cards. Five hours of play, and then Tom Barton turned into Stateroom 16 with just twenty-three hundred dollars of Harvey's losses recovered. Next morning they met.

The comrades clasped hands in staggering silence, then Harvey broke loose. "My salvation!" he cried. "Did you drop straight from heaven to save me from suicide? Tom, I'm wellnigh insane. I've lost nearly all I possess—twenty-nine hundred dollars—to a scoundrel of a ship gambler. I've also lost the sweetest girl on earth—the only woman I ever loved—to a miserable interloper by the name of 'Montague,' whom I am going to challenge to a duel and you are to be my second."

"Too busy," broke in the wag. He produced a goodly roll. "Here, Harvey, if you will promise never to touch a card again, I'll restore your losses, to the tune of two thousand and more, which I recovered from the crook gamester. Sorry I can't recover so easily from 'Mr. Montague.' Good bye! I'm Editor-in-chief of the 'Tinpania Tidings' and the devils are waiting for copy." With that Tom left his comrade.

The last number of the 'Tidings' was a wonder for wit; but two paragraphs alone are worthy of quotation here:

"A STOWAWAY.—It may interest Captain Kilrain and his seven-day guests to know that a gentleman stowaway has occupied Stateroom 16 for the entire voyage. As, however, the Seamen's Home fund is richer by about 60 pounds sterling through his efforts on the 'Tinpania Tidings', may he be forgiven!"

"AT THE SIGN OF THE SMOKING-ROOM.—A professional ship-gambler has won over $7,000 on this voyage, nearly $3,000 from one young victim alone. A reporter for the 'Tidings' penetrated the stateroom of the crook and found there a complete snide-game layout, marked cards and all. 'Tidings' suggests that the captain place the offender under immediate arrest."

"SOCIETY NOTE.—The engagement of Miss Adele Raleigh of Baltimore, to Mr. T. Jack Montague-Barton, of New York, is announced."

IN all Paris there is no stranger sign than the one displayed opposite the Vincennes railway station, just where the Rue de Lyon leads out from the Place de la Bastille. It is a very modest little announcement, lettered in black and gold, and swung above the entrance to a narrow, unlighted flight of steps. Those who pause to turn away with a smile or jest, have learned that——

"This Agency Supplies a Fourteenth Guest When Desired."

M. Loisir had never seen this curious sign but once, yet it made so lasting an impression upon his memory that, some six months later, he was able to recall the exact location of the agency. With all other intelligent persons, he had sneered at such pandering to popular superstition; and once he had felt constrained to paragraph the matter in the "Temps," for such an ignorant survival of a benighted age merited the keen thrust of his pasquinade.

Being a jovial bachelor with many friends, M. Loisir was wont to celebrate his birthday with a yearly dinner. It was upon one of these pleasant occasions that he was suddenly confronted by a startling exigency. A quick glance about the room had disclosed the fact that, of the fifteen guests bidden, only twelve were present. Adding himself to this number, the distressed host saw that an unlucky thirteen would soon surround his board.

At this crisis the agency in the Rue de Lyon was called to mind. There was not a moment to lose. A servant was dispatched to the proper address with the most urgent order for a fourteenth guest. Meanwhile, M. Loisir, with his ready wit, strove to divert the gentlemen from the contemplation of their empty stomachs. He liberated whole flocks of new jokes, and unreeled meters of sparkling verse; he recounted more bloody adventures than twelve strong men could believe; his remarks grew incoherent, while the perspiration started out upon his forehead; his eyes followed the galloping hands of the clock, and his ear was strained to catch the first click of the door-latch. It came at last.

"Ah!" cried M. Loisir, springing to his feet and darting into the entry, "the belated guest has arrived." Whereat the twelve gentlemen sighed with relief and made ready for the advance upon the dining-room.

There was an exclamation of surprise from the entry, and the voice of M. Loisir was heard raised in protest. A moment later the portieres were drawn aside, and the host appeared with a beautiful woman leaning on his arm. His face was a study of conflicting emotions.

"Gentlemen," he said, "it is unnecessary for me to introduce you—every one present is so fortunate as to know Mlle. D'Artois. What strange chance has brought her as a benediction to our bachelor dinner we will no doubt learn in time. But first of all, let us see what provision the caterer has made to allay the cruel pangs of hunger."

It was a very quiet company until the last course was served. This was perhaps due to vigorous appetites and a certain embarrassed restraint. M. Loisir was like a man who dreams that he is dreaming and only awaits the denouement. Mlle. D' Artois attempted a little gayety, but it sounded forced and unnatural. The gray-haired Hincmar at last made bold to drag forward the subject that each one was revolving in his own mind.

"My dear," he said, turning to Mlle. D'Artois, "why keep us in suspense any longer? Who holds the magic key, you or our good host Loisir? Come, we are all old friends, unlock this pleasant little mystery and let us laugh with you."

"Let M. Loisir lead," she replied lightly, "and I will follow suit. If he jests, then will I. If he speaks sober truth, you shall hear the same from my lips. But in the latter case you will all be grievously disappointed, for a matter of francs can hardly be romantic."

"Then let us have both," cried Captain Fronsac, "truth from M. Loisir and romance from Mlle. D'Artois."

But the majority were for the truth and nothing but the truth. "Begin! begin!" they insisted. "We are dying of curiosity."

"My kind friends," said M. Loisir, with some hesitation, "you may have seen my paragraph in the 'Temps,' in which I ridiculed a certain superstition that still flourishes in this enlightened age."

"I recall it," observed M. Pepin, the journalist. "It was very well put. I confess to reproducing it without crediting the source."

"I only mentioned it," continued M. Loisir, modestly, "in order that you might know how free I am from the common belief in signs and omens. However it was probable that, of the company this evening, one might fear to make the thirteenth at my table; for it is said that one of such a gathering always dies within a year. Delaying the dinner, I sent to the agency in the Rue de Lyon for a fourteenth guest, but failed to specify that a gentleman was desired. To my astonishment Mlle. D'Artois returned with the messenger. I feel honored beyond words of expression, but am as much mystified as any one else."

"This grows interesting," laughed Count de Valery, as M. Loisir ceased speaking. "I think our novelist must already scent a plot. Eh, Roberval?"

"No, no," replied Roberval, "I see nothing so far—only that friend Loisir could not be tempted to sit down with thirteen at the table."

M. Loisir's protest was drowned in the general laughter, and there were calls for Mlle. D'Artois' story.

"What I am about to say," the lady began, when quiet was restored, "may be truth or it may be fiction—or both. I claim that as my prerogative. I will begin at the end."

"What brought me here was of course M. Loisir's message to the agency. What brought me to the agency was a pressing need of money. You all look surprised! You have doubtless believed me a very great heiress; yet I confess that I am forced to serve this agency for twenty francs a night. M. Loisir will be obliged to pay fifty francs for my presence, and the agency will gain the difference."

"She has no feeling," he told himself, "or she would not resort to such cruel torture."

With much deliberation each of the thirteen suitors wrote his name on a slip of paper and deposited it in a large Japanese vase. To insure equal chances, M. Loisir was made to shake up the names in the vase and present it to Mlle. D'Artois for the drawing.

"It will be the first one," she said tremulously, "and I will abide by the oracle."

Her hand disappeared in the vase and her fingers brought up a tiny strip of paper. Her eyes scanned it narrowly, then it was permitted to flutter back into the jar.

"Yes—you are a very—nervous writer—M. Loisir." she said.

Crash! went the Japanese vase, and M. Loisir was holding Mlle. D'Artois in his arms.

"My prize!" he murmured. "My prize!"

Very sadly the guests shook hands with the happy couple, and congratulated M. Loisir on his rare good fortune, while inwardly cursing their own bad luck. Then they had the good taste to withdraw.

"You will at least permit me to announce it in the morning paper," pleaded M. Pepin, the journalist. "It will create a sensation, I promise you. May I make it a half column?" To this there were no objections offered.

"Annette," said Felix Loisir, when he was finally left alone with his fourteenth guest, "if you love me with a whole heart, how could you so lightly trust our future happiness to chance?"

"Dear Felix," she replied, "I could not read the names on the slips."

"Could not?"

"No; for love is blind."

"But my name, you——"

"Ah, the heart will speak!"

When they were out in the cool night air, and on the way to the stately mansion of her father, Annette said:

"Felix, I have one more confession."

"Well?"

"I am a 'Daughter of the Cross,' and we may only consecrate to charity that which we earn by our own labors. So, you see——"

M. Loisir saw.

KING'S EVIL.

How Ignorance and Superstition go Hand in Hand.

A curious sight might have been seen in England a couple of centuries ago. At Whitehall or some other royal residence a little group of people would shrinkingly await the coming of the king, in order to be "touched for the evil." The specific "evil" was scrofula, and it was the popular belief that scrofula could be cured by the royal touch. Hence the common name for scrofula was King's Evil.

Nowadays we know that scrofula is a disease of the blood and that even were there magic in a kingly touch, no external treatment could cure scrofula. The medicine which cures scrofula must deal with the blood. It must be able to eradicate and eliminate the poisons which corrupt the blood and breed and feed disease. When the blood is cleansed, the pimples, blotches, boils and other eruptions disappear, ulcers and sores are healed and the flesh becomes sound and healthy.

THE RIGHT WAY

to cleanse the blood from scrofula is to choose that remedy which has cured thousands of people who suffered from scrofula in its most grievous forms.

"I am using a good many of your medicines in my practice," writes Dr. Joseph Fike, of Lost Springs, Marion Co., Kansas. "Ten years ago there was an emigration from Rusland to this country and there was a lady in the company who was badly affected with that dreadful disease, scrofula. Her mouth and throat were in an awful condition, and there were lumps on the outside, below the jaws, the size of a hen's egg. Other doctors had been called and they said it was a fatal case. I was called and made my diagnosis. I felt confident that none of my remedies would benefit her any. It came to my mind that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery was recommended for such cases, so I went to the drug store and bought one bottle and gave it to her to use as directed. Five bottles cured her and she is well to-day. She is married now and has three healthy children."

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery judged solely by the cures it has effected is without doubt the most powerful and most perfect blood purifying medicine of the century. It is a radical remedy. It goes to the root of the disease. Some preparations containing mineral poisons such as mercury are offered as cures for scrofula. These medicines only suppress the symptoms of disease for a while and give the skin a look of clearness, but after a time the suppressed disease like a smothered fire breaks out anew and with a new violence.

It is the uniform testimony of those who have been cured of scrofulous diseases by the use of "Golden Medical Discovery," that the cure is permanent. In many instances the testimonial to the cure has not been offered until the lapse of several years proved how thoroughly and lastingly the medicine had done its work.

No class of people are more grateful for the blood purifying power of the "Discovery" than women whose faces have been marked and marred by pimples and other eruptions. The smooth skin and clear complexion which come back when "Golden Medical Discovery" has swept the blood clean of its corrupting poisons, are a source of unfeigned delight to those who for years have had their beauty marred by some form of eruptive disease. Beauty begins in the blood, and the first step to beauty is to cleanse the blood of the corrupting impurities which weaken the body and befoul the flesh.

THE SCOURGE OF CIVILIZATION.

From half civilized or unsanitary countries come the plagues which decimate the teeming populations of the Orient. Sanitary science and medical skill have banished the plagues from among ourselves, but civilization has its own scourge in that form of scrofula which attacks the lungs and is popularly known as consumption.

Plagues are not persistent. They appear and disappear again for years. Scrofula of the lungs or consumption is a persistent disease. Every day of every year it gathers in its victims; one-sixth of all deaths from disease being attributed to consumption. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures scrofula wherever it finds it. It eliminates the scrofulous poison from the blood and so the organs which are fed by blood are relieved from the scrofulous poisons which destroy them. Obstinate, deep-seated coughs, bronchitis, bleeding of the lungs and similar dangerous forms of disease are perfectly and permanently cured by "Golden Medical Discovery."

"Dr. Pierce's medicine has not only benefited me greatly but it has done wonders for my two sons," writes Mrs. M. Hartrick, of Demster, Oswego Co., N. Y. "Both had scrofula. I have lost two daughters in less than five years with consumption and scrofula. My eldest son was taken two or three years ago with hemorrhage from the lungs. It troubled him for over a year. He took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and has not had a hemorrhage in over a year. My younger son had scrofulous sores on his neck; had two lanced, but has not had any since he commenced to take your medicine."

ABSOLUTELY RELIABLE.

"Golden Medical Discovery" can be absolutely relied on as a safe and sure medicine for diseases caused by a scrofulous condition of the blood. It cures disease of skin and scalp, eczema, salt-rheum, tetter, scrofulous sores and swellings, as well as scrofula of the lungs and other diseases having their origin in a corrupt condition of the blood.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is no other medicine "just as good" for the cure of scrofulous diseases.

"Ah, my dear," said the grizzled Hincmar, with tears in his eyes, "this is a shame. Why have you not come to me, your old friend, and told all your troubles? God knows that you are welcome to everything that I have."

"It is the same with us all, Mlle. D'Artois," said M. Loisir, earnestly. "If I might devote some of my useless riches to your comfort, it would make me the happiest man in light-hearted France."

"O you must not talk so!" cried Mlle. D'Artois. "You will have me in tears if you continue, and that would dampen the humor of the situation."

After a moment's silence she continued:

"There are some women who would seek marriage as a release from such a difficulty. I—I have been thinking of it myself; but without a fortune——"

"Annette," said Hincmar, solemnly, "there are thirteen good, honorable, unmarried gentlemen here this evening. Will it please you to bestow your hand upon any one of them?"

"But what if they—what if he should refuse?" she ventured.

"Refuse!" exclaimed Hincmar. "Refuse? If he refused, girl, it would be the very last sin he committed in this world."

"O you are very terrible," she said, laughing softly. "But I will tell you a secret. Every gentleman here has already asked for my hand—I mean all but one."

The gentlemen stole indignant glances at each other, turned very red, coughed distressingly, and waited for the embarrassing pause to be bridged over.

"And may we know the name of this one who has come so far short of his duty?" inquired Captain Fronsac. "I move that we make it unanimous."

A chair was pushed back at the head of the table, and M. Loisir, very white and agitated, moved to where Mlle. D'Artois was seated.

"Annette," he said firmly, "I have never had the courage to speak when we were alone. The presence and example of my friends emboldens me. Believe me, I have loved you for years. Will you bestow your hand upon me?"

"Bravo! bravo!" cried Roberval, drawing pencil and tablet from his pocket. "Proceed! I take notes for a new novel."

"You make me very happy, Felix," Mlle. D'Artois replied, when M. Loisir pressed her for an answer; "but I must not be unfair to my other friends. Listen all! I am resolved to take for my husband one of the gentlemen here to-night. What can be fairer than to decide it by lot—are you agreed? Do not answer. It shall be so."

M. Loisir groaned and went to his chair in great distress.

THE SIGN ON THE GATE.

A Story of Missionary Life in China at the Present Time.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY GEORGE H. SMITH.

Copyright, 1900, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

DR. EUNICE PORTER walked across the room which she used as an office in her neat little Chinese house, and lifting a slender ebony rod, struck the bronze gong which hung beside the door.

This gong looked like a miniature Chinese pagoda, with one artistically carved story hung above another. When the ebony stick ran down from top to bottom a deep melodious chord of sound filled all the house and floated out through the bamboo walls into the garden.

Dr. Porter waited a moment, and then, when Wan Tche, her little Chinese man-servant who should have answered the summons, did not appear, she struck two chords on the gong. This was the signal for the cook, whose domain, although in the back of the house, was yet within easy hearing. Still there was no response.

"This is very strange," said Dr. Porter to herself, and went to look for some one whom she could send on an errand. When she found no one but herself in the house she opened the street door and stepped outside. While she stood there, looking down the street, the door swung to behind her. When the young woman turned to enter the house again she saw upon the outside of the door, staring her full in the face, a sprawling dull red stain of human blood.

Stepping quickly inside the gate the woman locked the door and double bolted it, and hastening through the house made fast all the other entrances. Then she sat down in the office and took counsel with herself. She knew now why the servants had not answered her call. They had seen the mark on the door and had fled the house as if it had been plague stricken.

Dr. Eunice Porter was a medical missionary who had been living in one of the Chinese cities for six years, and working among the natives there. Her work had seemed successful, and she had felt that she had won the confidence and regard of the people to an unusual extent. Never until the Boxer trouble had arisen had there been any public intimation of ill will, and now, to find that she had been marked for death did not cause her fear so much as grief.

For that was what the dull red mark on the street door meant. Dr. Porter knew Oriental life well enough to read the warning. A sullen, ugly mob already might be gathering before the house—she listened involuntarily for the sound. Perhaps it might be night before they would come, or even the morrow, but come they would, and all means of escape from the city had been shut off for days. All the white residents but herself and a few of the teachers in a mission school had left the city long ago, before the army had encamped about the place. Her friends had urged her to go with them, but she had refused, and would not even leave her own house to join the teachers in the school. She had told herself that she would not be harmed. She had always placed great confidence in the gratitude which the people had seemed to feel for the good which her medical skill had done them.

Was this to be her reward? Had she forgotten or underestimated the jealousy and hatred which her cures had stirred up in the hearts of the native "witch-like" doctors?

She thought once of trying to reach the mission, but knew in her heart that it was now too late to do this. Even if she dared pass through the streets she would find the same dread seal on the door of that house too. Perhaps the mission was already destroyed and the teachers slain.

The hours of the day passed, and the woman waited. In mid-afternoon she heard coming the sounds for which she had listened. A murmur which grew to a roar, advancing up the street and centering before her door. Men's voices, and the shriller ones of women. She wondered why they did not break down the door at once. Then the sound was hushed, and she heard one voice speaking—some one whom she had helped perhaps, pleading for her life. All gratitude was not lost, then. She was thankful for that.

"Tapi yang kuei tze; tapi, tapi!" (Kill the foreign devils; kill, kill!") a shrill voice shouted, and the din began once more. Blows were struck against the gate.

The doctor opened a desk in her office and took a tiny bottle from among those neatly placed there. She would not open it until the last moment, but it was a relief to know that one breath from its contents would be sufficient—that even after the mob had broken into that very room she could put her real self beyond their reach. Her dead body she could not save—she had seen human heads carried through the city on long bamboo stakes—but her life, and the power to make her suffer, she could put beyond the reach of these men.

The tumult grew louder, and then hushed again. What now? Was some other grateful friend risking his life to plead for her? There was silence except for a knocking on the gate, and then, when the door was not opened, a loud voice cried imperiously, "Open, in the name of his Highness, Prince Ki, the ruler of this province!"

The woman in the house could not comprehend what this meant, but she made no move to obey. The summons must be some ruse of the mob. Prince Ki was said to be a well-meaning man, but his wife, a woman of royal blood, was one of the most bitter reactionaries in all the empire. She had great influence over her husband, and it was said that she had secretly incited the uprising in the province.

"Open, in the name of the ruler of the province!" The summons came again, and then, when no one answered, a stronger blow upon the gate broke the lock and bolts and sent the door inward.

The woman in the office, peeping out through a lattice, saw standing in the gateway the chief envoy of Prince Ki himself, gorgeous in his official uniform. Behind him stood his escort, and slinking back from them, huddled in the street, the men and women who formed the mob, cowed into silence.

One other thing the woman saw. When the door had swung back she had seen the death stain on it, but she had also seen, stamped over this, the huge yellow seal which was the sign of Prince Ki himself, a symbol which was omnipotent in the province. So long as that sign was on her house the missionary knew that not all the men in the city, fanatics though they might be, dare harm the house or any one in it.

The missionary opened the office door and stood in full view of all the company.

"What do you want?" she asked in Chinese of the envoy.

The minister made a profound obeisance. "Madam," he said "the little son of the noble Prince Ki is ill unto death. His Highness begs that you will come to save his life." The messenger waited a moment, and then added, "Madam, the most noble Princess Ki Wang also begs that you will come."

In the few minutes that she stood there listening many thoughts flashed through the woman's mind. Never, in all the six years she had lived in China, had the Princess sent for her, nor had she ever seen her royal Highness. Was this a trap? She knew, though, of the little Prince. He was an only son, the child of his parents in their old age. The cry for help might be an honest one. The instincts of the physician conquered.

"I will go," she said. It was not the first time that Dr. Eunice Porter had faced death.

Taking a medicine case from the office, and still keeping the little glass vial in her hand, Dr. Porter walked into the street. At a sign from the prince's envoy four coolies in government livery brought up a sedan chair. The missionary entered it and was rapidly borne away.

The road to the palace passed the mission house. Dr. Porter, looking from behind the curtains of the chair saw what she had feared, the same red sign of death upon the closed street gate, but as yet, thank God, no mob had gathered before the walls. Would they surge there from her house, disappointed of one victim to seek another?

The coolies, running swiftly, carried her through the palace gates while she was still wondering over the fate of her fellow countrywomen. Almost at once she found herself taken into the inner apartments of the palace—into which no foreigner had ever been admitted before—and near to the room where the sick boy was. The Prince himself was walking up and down an outer room.

"Go in," he said. "Lose no time! else he may be dead," and drew a silken curtain from before a door.

Inside the room the missionary saw a child purple in convulsions, held down by main force by a frightened nurse. In an instant everything but the patient and the case was forgotten.

An hour later the child lay quiet on the cushions, weak and unconscious, but at ease. The physician, sitting by his side, looked up to find before her, dressed in richest silk, a woman ashen-faced with fear and grief, and knew that for the first time she was in the presence of the Princess Ki Wang.

Their eyes met, and for a full minute the two women studied each other—a Chinese royal princess and a New England woman doctor. The princess spoke.

"Will my son live?" she whispered.

"I cannot say, now," the doctor answered, speaking in the native dialect of the province. "The night will show." Then she turned and taking from her case a white tablet dissolved a portion of it and placed the liquid between the boy's lips. In that minute of time, when she had been looking into the royal mother's eyes, the physician had resolved to save not only her own life but that of her fellow teachers in the mission.

An hour later the doctor sent for Prince Ki and the boy's mother, and had them see the child. He was still quiet, but it seemed almost the quiet of death. He did not move, and hardly breathed. Sending all the servants from the room the doctor talked long and earnestly to the frightened parents. When she had done, the princess cried eagerly to her husband: "Go! Send at once! Lose no time! May the gods grant we be not too late!"

Five minutes later, the doctor, heard through the lattice window the steps of a company of men hastening from the palace. As soon as she was alone in the room she took another vial from her case, and dropping a portion of the contents into a porcelain cup half full of water, began to give the remedy to her patient at regular intervals.

When daylight came to the palace joy came with it, for the sick boy was said to be out of danger. Though he lay back on the cushions weak and faint, his eyes were open and he was conscious and could speak. When the parents were willing to let the white doctor go from the palace they would have given her gold and a jewel worthy the life of the son of a prince, but she refused them all.

"The ruler of this city, and the Princess Ki Wang," she said, "are able to give that which is of far greater value to me than gold and jewels."

And so it was that when her sedan chair was borne back to her house, to which she found the servants had already returned, she saw as she passed the mission that over the red death stain on the gate had been set the yellow symbol of royal protection.

THE BELT OF DEATH.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY BURTON MCPHAIL.

SYDNEY Janvrin was at Bombay making purchases for another trip to the interior. Maskuki, a guide whom he had picked up somewhere in the town was with him.

This guide was generally considered a thoroughly bad man, ready to commit any crime for personal gain. A beautiful eye made the man twice as dangerous, for it would seem that no man could look deep within and suspect the true character of the man.

Doctor Tupper learned of the guide whom Janvrin had chosen and started at once for the latter's rooms, hoping to persuade him to get rid of Maskuki before he left the city. To his surprise and chagrin, however, the doctor found that he was one day too late, Janvrin having started the previous day.

Five days out of the city Janvrin became sick with malaria and for ten days scarcely left his tent. During this time the Hindoo proved a most solicitous servant, apparently doing all in his power to relieve his master.

"I have a considerable sum of money deposited at a bank in Bombay," said Janvrin one morning after a particularly bad night; "in case anything happens to me, take this bank-book and letter you will find in it and go to the bank; the money that will be paid you, you are to keep."

A day passed, however, and Janvrin seemed somewhat better.

"If the master could find strength to make a one day's journey to the North, he would find health again," said the Hindoo, "there is a great doctor twelve miles from here who could soon put him on his feet again."

The following day, the sick man feeling still better, the journey was attempted, Maskuki carrying all the luggage, Janvrin dragging himself along as best he could, stopping whenever he found his strength leave him. It was late at night when at last they arrived.

"Maskuki has with him a sick master," said the Hindoo, having greeted the doctor, "and he would beg you to restore him to health, good Salimkula."

A few other words were spoken in the native tongue which Janvrin did not understand at that time, though he learned their true import a few days later.

"Salimkula has power to make the white man well again," said the doctor, bowing graciously, "come within and rest while I prepare the medicine which shall bring new life."

Two hours passed before the doctor was seen again, though Janvrin could hear him at work a short distance away. When at length he did come, he brought a curious belt made of snake-skin and which he held carefully, as though afraid of injuring it.

"Salimkula is a great magician and doctor," said he, stooping beside the sick man, "permit him to loosen the clothing and fasten this belt about thee; it is the wonderful belt of life made solely by Salimkula, whose fame has gone throughout the land."

Deftly the Hindoo now loosened Janvrin's garments and in little more time than it takes to tell of it the belt was securely fastened about Janvrin's loins.

"Keep this belt about thee for one week," said the doctor, "and upon no occasion remove it. Taking the medicine that I now hand thee, you will be able to start on the morrow and one week from now new life will have entered the diseased body and forgotten will be the sickness and pain of the past few days."

The following morning Janvrin indeed did find himself much better, so that an early start was made. At noon, however, he complained of a feeling of pain both in the head and chest, something different than any he had experienced in the past. Maskuki, however, made light of it, affirming that it was sure to follow severe cases of malaria, and that shortly it would pass; in the meantime they must hasten forward, lest night overtake them in the jungle.

The pain which Janvrin complained of presently subsided and the march was pressed with more vigor, though a certain unaccountable feeling of weight both on the head and chest oppressed him.

The next day Janvrin found that though the fever was abated, new and strange feelings of pain and uneasiness had taken possession of him, and at noon, after traveling for four hours, refused to go farther, affirming that he was unable to advance another step.

Here they remained several days, Janvrin constantly growing worse, acute pains constantly harrassing him, his skin taking on a peculiar tinge of green which was gradually deepening. His temperature was five degrees above normal, pulse light and exceedingly rapid and his breath came in short painful gasps. It was evident that the sick man was fast approaching death.

Several times had Janvrin suggested the casting off of the belt which the doctor had fastened about him, but each time was the Hindoo ready with some excuse, affirming that in that alone was Janvrin's hope of final recovery. Finally, however, while Maskuki was absent securing a sack of water, he managed to unhook the belt and was about to toss it to one side, when the thought occurred to him that it might be well to examine more closely the snakeskin.

The belt was about half an inch thick midway between the two ends and gradually tapered to less than an eighth of an inch. The greatest width was at the center, being at that point about three inches across. The careless eye would perceive nothing peculiar about this belt, but looking closely, Janvrin discovered a tiny duct that seemed to lead directly into the thickest part of the belt; this duct was little larger than a fine needle.

Taking out his knife, Janvrin quickly cut the belt open between the lining and the snakeskin. That which he now beheld was a revelation in more ways than one. Within this belt was a minute mechanism, as delicately put together as the works of a watch. Even after the knife had opened the skin the tiny wheels were moving with perfect regularity. The duct which had first aroused his suspicions, Janvrin found was in direct communication with a little sack containing a green fluid.

Instantly did light break upon the sick man. Slowly but surely was he being poisoned to death at the hands of Maskuki and the native doctor. The motive—the bank account at Bombay.

Quickly taking thread and needle from his case, Janvrin now sewed the belt together, meanwhile watching sharply for the Hindoo's return. Scarcely had he finished when he came bearing the sack of water.

Something in Janvrin's eyes told the native that there was trouble in store for him, for he trembled as he stood before the white man.

"I want you to fasten this belt about you, Maskuki," said Janvrin, drawing his revolver, "I mean it; inside of thirty seconds it must be about you, or I shall blow out your brains."

For ten seconds the Hindoo stood like a statue before Janvrin, his face drawn and eyes starting from their sockets, Janvrin covering him with cocked revolver. Suddenly he sprang at the white man with the fury of a tiger, and had Janvrin been less watchful he would have succeeded in his purpose. As it was, however, he had covered less than half the six paces that separated the two men, when the revolver spoke, and the Hindoo lay dead at his feet.

Gradually Janvrin began to recuperate and a fortnight from the death of Maskuki he started for Bombay, which city he reached without incident worthy of note.

Carrying the belt to a chemist, the green fluid which it contained was analyzed and found to be identical with the poison of a snake little less venomous than the deadly cobra. One minute drop injected once in six hours had almost accomplished its work.

HELD FOR RANSOM.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY E. CARL LITSEY.

GOLDDUST Gulch was in an uproar, and not without cause. It was not a new find; it was not a bar-room brawl ending in a double death; it was not the announcement that Coyote Charlie was going to quit drinking and make a man of himself. Such things as these were common, and no one paid any attention to them. A far more astounding thing had happened this morning, but we must go back a couple of weeks, in order to lead up to it.

Just fourteen days previous to this a stranger had come riding into Golddust Gulch late one afternoon. He was a dark man, and tall, for the slim legs which hung down on either side of the little gray burro he bestrode almost touched the ground. As he pulled up in front of the saloon, which was everybody's stopping-place, the men standing there eyed him as openly and as boldly as they would a caged curiosity. He was clad in a neat black suit, and his shoulders seemed trying to meet in front of his breast. His eyes were red, as from having shed tears, and his cheeks were hollow. But the citizens of Golddust Gulch attributed the inflamed condition of his eyes to the dust and wind, for they could not exactly comprehend how a man could weep. He made known that he had come out to hunt his fortune, staked out a claim, and went to work.

Barton Burrows was the tenderest tenderfoot that had ever struck a mining camp. He would take all sorts of rough treatment, and never resent anything. As a consequence, he was held in profound contempt by all the citizens, and his presence among them was simply borne, nothing else.

How it happened no one could tell, but soon it became rumored that he had suffered a great affliction in the near past. His wife and little girl had died of a disease which was epidemic in the south, and he had come out here to forget his sorrow in hard work. And when they heard this story which some stray wind blew to them, they remembered the red eyes and sunken cheeks of the tenderfoot, and some pitied him. But he was quiet as a woman, and slunk to and from his work without a word to any one. Two weeks after he came, Golddust Gulch was thrown into an uproar.

The barkeeper of the Jolly Boys was found dead in his bed that morning with his throat neatly cut; the strong box under his bed was rifled of its store of wealth, and pinned to the top of the bar with the very dagger which had done the deadly work was a scrap of white paper, on which was written in pencil: "Compliments of the tenderfoot."

The camp was wild with amazement and rage, but the dark hollows of the surrounding hills safely kept the man who had fled to them for shelter.

A few months went by, then the stage coach to Silver City was held up by a single man, and its passengers relieved of all valuables about their person. The man who committed this daring piece of devilment was masked, but Four-fingered Fred, the stage driver, stated that he was a tall man with drooping shoulders; very thin, and dressed in black. Not long after a mining boss was passing through to superintend the sinking of some new shafts. He was the only occupant of the stage, and though Four-fingered Fred swore roundly that he would never be caught napping again, his hands went up so quickly at the sharp command of the knight of the road, that his lines dropped. This time the passenger himself was confiscated, and only obtained his liberty by parting with five thousand dollars.

The citizens of Golddust Gulch were, alone, perhaps, all who knew the identity of this terror of the Silver City trail. Then they forgot their grudge against him in admiration of his boldness, and proudly proclaimed to every new comer that they had schooled Black Barton, the road agent.

How such news reached him will ever remain an impenetrable mystery, but Black Barton never failed to know beforehand when a person with money was to travel over the road where he operated. And such persons he invariably took in charge, and held for ransom. The condition of affairs was getting deplorable, and there was no remedy. Traps were set, and snares were spread, but this man laughed at them all, and bided his own time to act.

One day the Silver City coach was late. A single-tree had snapped and a new one had to be made of some raw material, which the driver always took with him. Twilight came and they were still in the hills, the old vehicle, shaped much like a land terrapin, squeaking and whining over the bumpy road. Four-fingered Fred was getting nervous, for a lady and her little daughter were traveling with him that day, and he had caught the glimpse of a diamond on her finger as he helped her into the coach back at Mineville. Black Barton had been quiet for over three weeks, and——

"Stop your coach, friend Fred!"

Something like an oath came from the driver but he pulled up his horses and mechanically raised his hands, although this time the order had not been given.

"Suppose you let your horses rest awhile," continued the man in black, standing quietly by the head of the off leader, with his pistol levelled at the breast of the man on the box. "I believe it would be a humane act for me to lighten the load they have to pull, so I must ask you to come down and help the ladies out."

"How in the devil did you know——" burst out Fred, but the other man broke in.

"No profanity, please. Do as I bid you, then drive on to Silver City and spread the news."

Ten minutes later the empty coach was rattling towards its destination, and Black Barton with the mien and language of a gentleman, was telling his prisoners that they must accept his hospitality for a while; that they would be treated courteously and kindly, and that as soon as money for their release was forthcoming he would set them at liberty. The child clung, sobbing, to her mother and once, when she peeped up at the man before her, he caught a glimpse of her round gray eyes and his face paled, while the muscles about his mouth hardened.

The place whither Black Barton conducted his captives was a cave which he himself had hollowed out, and by natural and artificial means, hidden from the most searching eye. Here he gave them food and soft rugs upon which to sleep. The woman and child, worn with fright and fatigue, were soon asleep, the little one with its head close to its mother's breast. Then the man took down the lantern which was hanging from the roof, and noiselessly approaching the unconscious pair, held it so that its light fell full upon the girl. He knelt on the floor to look closer.

"Mary's face! My baby's face, to a line!" he gasped and shrank away in awe.

When he put the lantern back in place his hand was shaking. Then he lay down on the further side of the cave but not to sleep. Hour after hour he lay, watching that sleeping child four feet from him, and living in the past. In the middle of the night the little one moved and the man could see that her eyes were open. For fear of frightening her should she turn and find him awake, he closed his own. A moment later he heard a child's timid, supplicating voice. He looked in spite of his will, and beheld the little figure kneeling, with her face upturned and her tiny hands clasped in prayer.

"Dear Lord, take us away from this awful man, and give us to papa."

That was all. But Black Barton closed his eyes and shivered like a palsied man, while his lips unconsciously framed an "Amen."

In the morning when the mother woke, she found that a piece of paper had been slipped in her hand during the night. It bore these words:

"Follow the ravine until you come to the road, then wait for the Silver City stage."

And Black Barton was never seen again.

THE PLANET EARTH.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

WHAT was the beginning of it? Where did it come from? These are the questions which come to the scientist again and again, in these days of speculation.

We must go at once to the sun, a great ball of fire mist rotating in space. As it whirls, it throws off rings of fire mist, like the rings about our neighboring planet Saturn. These rings, freed from the holding force of their luminous parent, rotate about themselves and gradually assume a spherical shape, and revolve about the sun from which they came. Gradually as the fire mist cools a great molten globe is formed surrounded by an atmosphere which is heavy with carbonic acid and sulphuric acid, and covered with an ocean of water highly charged with chemicals.

Two forces are now at work solidifying this molten ball, first the gradual cooling on the outside by loss of heat which forms a solid crust, second the pressure of the outer crust which causes the interior to become solid and rigid, more rigid probably than steel.

But by the cooling of this great sphere contraction takes place, and as the solid crust contracts it is too large to fit the rigid core and it wrinkles, much as the skin on an apple wrinkles when it is baked. These great wrinkles emerge from the universal ocean and form the continental masses of the earth. As the cooling goes on smaller bendings and wrinkles form the mountain systems and plateaus. Gradually the heavier acids are absorbed and the ocean and atmosphere become what we find today upon the earth.

But now to return to the solid interior of the earth. We know that it must be very hot, for it has been proved that the temperature rises a degree to every fifty feet downward. Then it is not difficult to conclude that at fifty miles below the surface a temperature would be reached which is unknown upon the outside of the shell. At such a temperature everything would be in a state of fusion were it not for the pressure from without, which is so great that the particles of white hot matter are pressed and packed close together forming the solid core of the earth. Another interesting fact concerning this great furnace beneath our feet is its composition. It is thought that in the solid core we should find gold, silver, platinum and all the heavier elements in such abundance as we find clay, quartz and feldspar on the surface. This is explained by their weight, for as the molten mass of the earth cooled the heavier substances would sink below the lighter ones, which explains the fact that most of our rocks and sand contain a very large percentage of silica, alumina and carbon. Thus the gold and silver which we find in our mountains and rivers have been brought from a great depth in the earth by explosions and eruptions. If we could imagine ourselves living near the center of the earth brick houses would be as rare as golden palaces here while the ground would be paved with silver and platinum and a bit of common quartz would be a jewel fit for a king.

"The everlasting hills" have been talked of since the early days of poetry, yet nothing is more unstable than the mountains. No sooner does the land rise out of the sea and present its sloping surface and peaked summit to the light of the sun than the solar forces begin their work. The wind blows moisture in the form of clouds over it, rain falls upon it, wearing away its surface, percolating through crevices and dissolving many of its solid portions. In cold climates frost is an important factor in the erosion of the land. Water freezes in crevices and forces the particles farther apart. Glaciers wear off the mountain tops and sides and the ice on the shore plays a similar part with the cliff of the coast. Every drop of rain that falls gathers to itself a grain of soil which it carries away from the hill to the sea. Thus the rivers are not composed wholly of water but should be thought of as carrying also a load sometimes amounting to tons and tons of soil in a year. The swifter the rate of stream the larger the size of the material it moves, and the greater its capacity for tearing away. But as it reaches the lower land its load is deposited along the banks or in time of flood is spread out over the plain as in the Nile Valley. Sometimes a bank of the fine soil is deposited where the river current is arrested by the ocean waves and a delta plain like that of the Mississippi is formed. It is said that this great river extends its delta a mile in sixteen years.

But much of the detritus from the continents is deposited upon the ocean floor the finest material being carried farthest out forming clay beds, the sand being dropped upon the nearer shore and the gravel and larger material left high up on the land. Heat and pressure now begin their work again and in time beds of pudding stone, sandstone and slate are formed from the gravel, sand and clay. Because of the constantly added pressure due to the material deposited upon the ocean floor the continental masses are constantly rising and the coastline changes perceptibly in a thousand years. Thus as the solar forces, wind and rain, tear down the mountains a contra force is forcing up the continents because of the weight upon the sea floors.

But perhaps the most attractive force in world building is the volcanic force which acts swiftly and in so dramatic a manner that the whole world of to-day is attracted whenever it manifests itself. A volcano is not of necessity a mountain, although that is the popular notion. Any vent through which molten matter from the interior of the earth may flow is a volcano whether it builds up a mountain or not. The stream of lava may spread out in all directions forming a great lava plain like many of those in our western states or it may be forced suddenly from the interior in such large quantities that it builds up about the vent a mountain of eruptive material.

That there should be molten material in the interior seems contrary to our former statement that the earth's core is solid. It is not so however. Intermediate between the crust, which has been hardened by cooling, and the core, which has become solid through pressure, is a region which contains the elements in a state of fusion. By the bending of the crust to form continents and mountains, arches are formed leaving great spaces above the molten material. Water percolating through the rocks becomes heated and forms steam which after a time fills the spaces, tears apart the rocks above making for itself a way to the outer air and forming a vent through which the lava pours out upon the surface of the earth to be ground up and carried away to the sea by the surface waters.

Thus was the earth formed, thus is it being formed to-day! Before any living creature appeared these forces were at work as they are to-day. How many times our soil has been worked over from lava to slate and back again to clay we cannot tell. How many times the continents have risen and sunk again, dipping the crests of the Rockies or Himalayas in the ocean waves, no one can tell, but scientists tell us that not less than 20,000,000 and perhaps more than 100,000,000, years have passed since the earth began to cool.

XERXA.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

IT was a fearfully windy night. Col. Ingraham's yacht "Xerxa" was tossing and pitching on the stormy Mediterranean. In the cabin all was in commotion, for the Colonel's daughter—a mere infant born the summer previous on the yacht—was missing and the nurse could not be found.

Two boats hastily put ashore; in one was the captain and three of the crew, in the other the Colonel and his son, a lad of about eight years, with two of the Colonel's friends who at the time were cruising with him.

They had left Dardaine at dark; a few moments previous, so the general supposition was, in the confusion of starting the woman and child had been left ashore. The boat was searched again and again to no avail.

Long after noon the following day the Colonel returned utterly broken down under the strain, for not a trace of the missing ones could be found.

For the next four weeks they cruised up and down the coast while the Colonel ransacked the villages within a radius of fifteen miles and advertised. But I am inclined to believe to this day had enormous rewards been suggested, his daughter's whereabouts might have been learned. The child however, was too young to be identified so that the chances of her ever being found in that country were few.

The Colonel's hope was sustained by this one fact. Soon after the child's birth, to commemorate the event on the yacht she had with due ceremony been christened "Xerxa" and on her right ankle had been tattooed a small X. To one disinterested this was perhaps the only apparent difference between her and the score of infants large and small who were brought to the yacht daily in answer to the advertisement and each day the poor father grew more disheartened until finally he gave up in despair and set sail for home.

A few years later the Colonel died and his last request was, that after his son had been graduated from college he should spend a given proportion of the income left him in searching for his sister.

* * * * * *

Just between daylight and dark The Turkish Cafe was filled with loungers, some sipping the fragrant Mocha and others on divans smoking the choice latakia in long, jasmine-stemmed pipes.

At the farther side of the room on a couch—half obscured in smoke from a nargileh at his side—reclined a young man, in garb only a Turk.

He shook himself as though to be free from thoughts perplexing and his mind wandered for the thousandth time to one he had seen that day as every day since his arrival at Constantinople—calling herself Eurena, while she sold her flowers in front of a mosque by day and at night frequently visited the cafes in hopes of disposing of the remainder of her wares, and then went—whither no one knew and no one cared except—except—yes, he would confess he had seen her bare, sandaled feet and delicately draped, though shabby robe, and had loved, and now he must find her and win her and take her back home with him—But his sister—what of her? He could not dally all his life here, but just to appease his conscience he would leave a good sum with some poor fellow who would perhaps think it worth his while to search for the girl. Just now his whole heart was bent on—Hark! what was that? From the corridor came a few coarse words, then a mocking laugh and then a sharp cry, and all was still save for the hurrying footsteps.

Following the crowd, on the marble floor he saw the flower girl, Eurena, lying pale and motionless, and as he wedged his way through the crowd and lifted her in his arms, on her ankle, stretched from beneath her loose garb, he saw a tattooed letter. Xerxa was found but his love was dead.

JOHN ROGERS.

JOHN ROGERS, the sculptor, was born in Salem, Mass., in 1829. He early evinced a taste for art, but his parents discouraged it, and he found no opportunity to gratify his desire till he was about twenty-seven years old, when, having been thrown out of employment as a machinist—he having learned that trade—he determined to turn his attention to his cherished plan. He accordingly went to Europe, studied awhile in Paris and Rome, but without the success he fondly expected. He returned to America thoroughly discouraged in his art. He sought a position in Chicago, securing that of City Surveyor. His mind recovered its tone, and he devoted his leisure hours to remodelling a group of figures for a ladies' fair, in behalf of some public charity. This group, "The Checker Players," when completed, attracted much attention, and encouraged him to persevere. Group after group came forth to public admiration, until he was enabled to open a studio in New York, in 1859. From that time his groups became deservedly popular, and now they are as familiar in American homes as household words.

Men, Women and Things.

CONDUCTED BY JENNIE MELVENE DAVIS.

We hear so much of wealthy Americans who have married into the peerage of England that the average American has the impression that the peerage is becoming Americanized. The titled classes number about twelve thousand and of these eighty are Americans. There are a large number of "colonials" in the ranks of England's nobility and prominent among these is the beautiful Viscountess Wolseley wife of the commander in chief of the British army. The Viscountess was Miss Erskine of Ottawa. Her celebrated husband was sent to Canada to take charge of the Red River Expedition. This was a brilliant success. Viscountess Wolseley is a very celebrated and scholarly woman with a distinct executive ability. Some of her balls have been the admiration and wonder of Dublin and London. She has the tact to bring the right people together at the right time and so thoroughly has she exercised her ability that her invitations are always eagerly sought. Her only daughter shares with her mother an intense interest and devotion to the army and is prominent in philanthropic and educational effort in behalf of "Tommy Atkins." The daughter will inherit the title on the death of her father, for by special act it may descend in the female line. The home of the Wolseleys in Euston Square is a perfect museum of curios collected in many lands. The Queen has recently offered Lord and Lady Wolseley apartments at Hampton Court Palace. Lady Wolseley is to have the use of them for life. All in all it is a brilliant and successful life that has developed from a girlhood in the little Canadian capital.

There are five or six illustrators in the country who command salaries that are fortunes. One of the best known of political caricaturists is Eugene Zimmerman or "Zim." He is acknowledged as the best "funny picture" man in the United States and it would be difficult to find any one who ever looks at a paper from whom "Zim" has not drawn a smile. His present home is at Horseheads, New York, but Switzerland was his birthplace. His parents removed to New Jersey and "Zim's" first wage earning was as assistant to a pastry cook. He says he gave the place a reputation for the weird designs that he made in "frosting" and for his dough images. People hesitated to cut them not wishing to destroy such curious bric-a-brac pastry. Finally he sought other occupation on the earnest solicitation of the baker. He tried sign painting and finally established himself in the business of sign making at Elmira, New York. One of his relatives brought some of his sketches to New York and Keppler of "Judge" gave him a place. His genius and industry have done the rest. It is said that when he is at work it seems to rain lines. His ideas are developed before he takes up the pen and his work is rapid and sure. A political cartoonist possesses a great power in this hurried age. The picture often enforces a truth or points a moral that strikes its way home when pages of argument would fail. To make a thing absurd is to kill its power for evil, so that a man like "Zim" holds a power hardly gauged. It is a great gift and one not to be estimated lightly.

Alexis E. Frye has an opportunity in educational work such as few men enjoy. He is the superintendent of the schools of Cuba, having volunteered for the position through interest in the work. Mr. Frye is a Harvard man who has been connected with the Normal School of Chicago and who has also been superintendent of schools in San Bernardino, Cal. Mr. Frye is also the author of a text book on geography. He is a man thoroughly familiar with the best modern methods in teaching, a broad theorist but a practical educator. He has the vision to see and the faith to realize what to others seem impossible tasks. To Americanize the schools of Cuba seemed a herculean work, but Mr. Frye's enthusiasm would not recognize difficulties He planned to bring two thousand Cuban teachers to the United States the past summer. They attended the session of the Harvard Summer School. The government gave them free transportation and $100,000 has been raised by private subscription to defray the expenses of the journey. They landed in Boston July 4th in time to witness the celebration of that day. Trips to neighboring historic places were taken and after the close of the summer school, New York, Washington, Chicago and Niagara Falls were visited. The impressions received will, it is believed, be of great service in Americanizing the Cuban teachers.

Jeannette L. Gilder is one of the most successful literary writers in this country. She is a woman of strong personality with a keen practical common-sense and intense devotion to her work. She has just won favor as a playwright through her version of QuoVadis. She was authorized by the writer Sienkiewiecz and by his translator and publishers to make a dramatization of the popular book. At about the time it was ready for production another version was brought out. They were both presented to the public the same night and the interest and rivalry have drawn crowded houses to see both versions of the play. Miss Gilder began her literary work at the age of fourteen. Her brother Richard Watson Gilder, the well-known writer and editor of the Century had commenced his literary work as a reporter on a Newark, N. J. paper. He soon started a morning paper on his own account. This paper known as the Morning Register suffered the fate of all attempts at local morning papers in the metropolitan district—it failed. Miss Gilder who was then about twenty years of age furnished several columns daily for the paper, both she and her brother often working fifteen hours a day. The experience gained was most useful. Miss Gilder obtained employment on the metropolitan press and slowly worked her way from proof reading to paragraph writing, editing telegraphic news, writing leaders, musical and dramatic criticism and book reviewing. For a number of years she was the New York correspondent of two Boston papers and of the Philadelphia Press as well as a contributor to the London Daily Mail. In 1881 with her brother Joseph Gilder she started the Critic. This literary monthly has been a great success. Miss Gilder has tried her hand at playwriting before and is also the author of some few books. She has the genius of indefatigable industry and thoroughness. Her writing is marked by a keen critical discrimination. There is an absence of "gush" and of attempt at striking writing that early pointed to the fact that critical writing might be her forte. It is as a critic rather than a creator that she has won her greatest successes. She is well known in the inner literary circles of New York where she always finds a warm welcome.

Mrs. Fletcher Webster Jewell who is at present living in Boston, has the honor of being the first American to volunteer as a nurse in the Boer war. In 1895 Mrs. Jewell was living in Johannesburg at the time of the Jameson raid. The women were sent out of the city when it became evident that an outbreak between the Boers and the Uitlanders was imminent. She refused to leave and after the raid acted as nurse to the thirty-five wounded Englishmen and the four Boers. Soon after she returned with her husband to this country and assisted in securing signers to the petition to release the American mining expert, John Hays Hammond. This petition she presented to "Oom Paul" and in time she had the satisfaction of knowing that it was granted. Mrs. Jewell will soon publish a novel that will be drawn largely from her South African experiences.

Wu-Ting-Fang, the Chinese minister to this country, is recognized as one of the ablest diplomats that the Orient has ever sent to America. He is a curious and careful student of our institutions and his comments are as frank and ingenuous as they are amusing. He has a keen, dry sort of wit that is almost Yankee in its penetration. He admires some of our institutions but is faithful to his belief in China. Occasionally his sense of humor is not keen enough to detect the American joke and he recently sent the information to his government that polygamy was on the increase in the United States, basing his statement on a gravely written article that depicted the members of a woman's club discussing the discouraging statistical fact that the feminine population exceeded the male and urging the adoption of polygamy as increasing their chance of marriage. Wu-Ting almost rivals his famous contemporary Li Hung Chang in the art of asking questions. He recently commented upon the injustice of our law that excluded Chinese laborers from the country at the same time that our press was expatiating upon the opportunities China offered Americans to make fortunes. "You may come to us and make money but our people may not come here to see you enjoy the wealth you have made in their native town." Wu Ting expressed the belief that the justice of the American people would lead them to repeal the law that they made during the periods when cheap labor was feared. Wu Ting is a man of fine education with a keen analytical mind. He is a polygamist in his own country, though he has but one wife in this country. She is fond of the ocean and has been a prominent figure on the board walk at Atlantic City. Her feet have been bound as is the custom of women of rank in her own land. For this reason she found the rolling chairs of great use and her chair followed by a Chinese attendant in native costume is always a center of interest. Wu Ting is a picturesque figure in his silk and satin brocades, with the curious thick soled silk shoes and the round brimless hat of China. He speaks excellent English and recently addressed the graduates of a Woman's Medical College. In his speech he expressed surprise that the medical profession had ever looked coldly upon the entrance of women to its ranks. He felt that the province of medicine was one peculiarly fitted to women. His little son attends the public school in Washington. His brightness is a source of great pride to his father. The little boy is a great favorite at the White House and his father says he is a born diplomat as he visits the White House oftener than his father. Wu Ting does not adopt Western dress but he does make the concession of cutting his finger nails. He has all the suavity of his race united to a natural courtesy that springs from the kindliness that makes him one of the most popular members of the diplomatic corps.

Zitkala-Sa is the strange musical name of a young Sioux Indian girl who is attracting much interest and attention by her beauty, her genius and her work. She lived in Dakota until she was nine years old. In a series of articles which she has written she describes her "Impressions of an Indian Childhood" and at the same time reveals a tragedy. She saw some of the Indians come home from Eastern schools and the longing to speak the white man's language, to know the white man's knowledge possessed her. She tells in unconsciously pathetic words how her mother seemed to comprehend this by the mother instinct and went out to wail by the graves of her ancestors. The longing grew in the heart of Zitkala-Sa and in time she found herself at a Friend's school in Indiana. From this school she went to Earlham college in the same state. She won a first prize in oratory and also a first prize in an interstate oratorical contest between several colleges. She taught for some time in the Carlyle Indian school but left this work to pursue the study of the violin in Boston. Her playing shows much talent while her writing receives the most favorable comment from critics. There is a frankness in her descriptions of the real thought and feeling of an Indian girl that is seldom found in this taciturn race. Her Life of an Indian Girl shows the mental change from the age she describes in her Indian Childhood. It throws much light on the disputed wisdom of Indian education. Zitkala-Sa is the most interesting representation of her race that has come within the observation of the literary and musical world and her career will be watched with interest.

Eugenie Bonnefois is one of the most interesting women in the world. Her small, bent figure is decorated with the red cross on a white ground, with the green and red ribbon, and with the purple ribbon of the French Academy, all given as recognitions of the great work of this French woman. In all her long life she has never slept in a bed. Her parents owned a mechanical museum on wheels and travelled from one country fair to another, now in Paris, now in the provinces, but always moving. Eugenie was born in the wagon and there she will probably die. Her class of people are called "foraines" in France, and there are hundreds of them who have followed the business of furnishing amusement at fairs for generations. When she was eighteen Eugenie Bonnefois taught herself to read and write. There were scores of children as ignorant as herself and she commenced to teach them as soon as she had learned a little. When her parents died they left her the museum and she drove it all over France. During the Franco-German war of '70 she served as a nurse and she received the recognition of the red cross. Then she went back to her wandering life, but with an earnest desire to better the condition of children who like herself were cut off from all opportunities for an education by the wandering life they led. She finally won the attention of those in authority and succeeded in establishing a travelling school in her wagon. Here the foraine children are instructed and finally receive a diploma. It costs about $1200 a year to support the school, and this sum Eugenie Bonnefois receives through private subscription. She gives them religious as well as secular instruction, and at Easter those who are prepared are confirmed in whatever church they may be near, for Mademoiselle Bonnefois and her work are known throughout France. Her face beams with kindly light. When asked if she ever became discouraged she answered, "Never; if one is to become discouraged in an undertaking it were better not to begin." The little wrinkled old woman has won recognition from all the best institutions in France. She is an officer of the French Academy; but best of all she has brought light and education to a class of people that were forgotten by all save her.

THE STORY OF EXPANSION.

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

THE history of the expansion of territory in this country has become of deep interest and the greatest importance to us all since the questions involved by the present growth of territory through the outcome of the Spanish war are now before the American people for judgment, having been adopted by both of the great parties as one of the (if not the paramount) greatest issues of the present contest. No person can rightly judge or intelligently consider these issues without knowing what our history in the question really is, and for that purpose COMFORT has prepared a brief review which will be presented without comment, so that readers of every party may read it.

Expansion is by no means a new question in America. In fact, in one form and another it has been considered by the voters of every generation and generally favorably. But in the present struggle it takes a new form because the expansion is no longer to take in simply adjacent territory, but reaches across the seas into other lands. It also opens up the vital question of how these newly-acquired islands are to be governed; whether as territories, which are sometimes to be states, with equal representation with the present states; or, as colonies having a local self government carried on under certain officers, such as Governors, representing and appointed by the central government at Washington.

As we have on other questions warned our readers, great care should be exercised in judging these important questions, and it must be remembered many of the sensational phrases and reports of parties and papers are coined and used as catchwords to capture votes among the unthinking. Much of the eloquence and many of the editorials which will come in this campaign will be only to catch votes. No matter what is said by politicians, the people of this country mean well and intend to do right, whether of one party or another; and we may be certain that in any event no harm shall in the end come to this country, which we all love, although we are fond of pretending that only about half of us do while the other half is supposed to be actively devising means to destroy it.

The story of expansion is interesting and will prove instructive to those who have never given it any consideration. It will be remembered that at the time of the discovery and settlement of America, Spain was the first power of the world, and her navies ruled the seas. Besides being the greatest naval power, she had the greatest wealth and resources of any of the civilized nations, and her commerce spread out through the then known civilized world into the distant lands occupied by barbarians.

It was through this leadership in commerce that her great fleets were sent into far-off seas in the way of trade, and upon the opening of the American continent, Spanish trading posts, forts and cities appeared on every hand. Gradually that nation was followed by others in the race of conquest, and the division of America, under what are now called zones of influence in trade, were well defined in the North American continent. The whole of South America was given over to the Spanish dominion, which stretched across the isthmus up through the present country called Mexico, and reaching up from the mouth of the Mississippi for its full length, was traced nearly to Hudson's Bay on the north. Besides the mouth of the Mississippi, she controlled the whole shore of the Gulf, comprising what is now the lower part of Alabama, and the whole of the state of Florida. Although the Spanish had touched the Pacific Ocean, their progress had not been as rapid on that side; and from a point about where San Francisco now is a line stretched in a circular way up toward the northern point of their dominions on the eastern side. Everything above this, comprising the Oregon territory as it was called, a large part of Canada and Alaska was then unexplored land.

PRESIDENT POLK.

By the peace of 1763, France had relinquished her claim to Canada, and the English held the whole of North America east of the Mississippi River with the exception of Florida as we have above written.

A few years after, the Revolutionary War broke out which was finally settled by the evacuation of the thirteen colonies by the British and the signing of the treaty of peace in Paris Sept. 3, 1783, which was negotiated on our part by Benjamin Franklin, John Jay and John Quincy Adams. The independent United States under this treaty extended from the Atlantic Coast to the Mississippi River; Florida, was given back by Great Britain to Spain, and Spain continued to hold the country west of the Mississippi, which naturally was but poorly defined, and went under the general name of the Louisiana Territory.

The early congresses and all the traditions of the united colonies which had become this independent country were against any idea of expanding the domains of the United States any further in any direction; but it must always be remembered in considering this great question that the circumstances were then so different and the country was so small and poor in population that the conditions under which the Constitution and earlier laws were enacted can hardly be duplicated at the present time.

SECRETARY W. H. SEWARD.

The remarkable progress in mechanical engineering, means of transportation, ways of communication, and modern conditions have so changed the whole aspect of affairs that we can scarcely place ourselves in mental touch with the condition of the people of that day and generation. Taking a letter as an ordinary example, and the transportation of the mail represents progress in all other lines of communication, at the time of the treaty of peace in 1783 it took a letter as long to go from Boston to Philadelphia, which was the seat of government, as it would now require across the Atlantic Ocean. A letter sent from Portland, Maine, at that time, to any of the settlements in Georgia, which was then the extreme south, would have taken as long to reach its destination as it would now take to circle the entire globe. It was fully as many days between Boston and New York by ordinary travel, as it is now hours by railroad. This does not take into consideration the electric telegraph and cables, which have brought the distant nations within hourly communication and closer connection than then existed between the most neighboring cities in this country.

The next twenty years saw great revolutions in the world, and especially among the European governments where war and conquest and revolution followed each other with startling rapidity. This brought about a period of depression in Spain, and taking advantage of the same her harassed colonies in various parts of South America set themselves up, one after another, as independent republics. While this period of depression was coming on, Napoleon was in the height of his power. Almost involved in war with him, Spain began to look about for a customer for her colony in North America. By a treaty with Napoleon in 1801, this vast tract was given to France, as Bonaparte then had the intention of placing a great colony there to prevent the growth of the United States to the westward, and control the Mississippi river, whose magnificent possibilities were evident to him. But two years later, seeing that he was about to have a war with Great Britain, and knowing that the supremacy of the British fleet could easily isolate any force which he might have in this possession and keep away all relief, he was brought to open negotiations with President Jefferson with a view to selling this tract of land to America.

Nothing can be more ironical than the fact that the present democratic party is pledged against expansion, and deprecates anything of the kind, while at the same time claiming Thomas Jefferson as the father of that party. Jefferson was one of the first great American statesmen, and a most remarkable man. He was an accomplished scholar, reading several languages with ease, and deeply versed in science and philosophy. He was, like all Virginians, a great enthusiast in out-of-door sports, and was very punctual in all his habits, with an honest dislike for ceremony or parade. He was a foremost leader in social and legislative reforms, devised our decimal currency, wrote the Declaration of Independence, and founded many of the doctrines which today are the foundations of the republic, and which are acknowledged by both parties as the corner stones of the edifice.

No person, with the possible exception of Washington, in all the political history of America was in his day so great a subject of vituperation and abuse as Jefferson. He was thoroughly misunderstood by a large portion of the citizens, and was represented as a rank atheist and a political adventurer.

Mr. Blaine, in his marvelous work, says: "It seems scarcely credible that the acquisition of Louisiana by Jefferson was denounced with a bitterness surpassing the partisan rancor with which later generations have been familiar. No abuse was too malignant, no epithet too coarse, no imprecation too savage to be implied by the assailants of the great philosophic statesman who laid so broad and deep the foundations of his country's growth and culture."

Fortunately for the United States, the patriotic and far seeing Jefferson was energetic in acquiring the title to this valuable domain, and equally energetic about sustaining our rights after its purchase in 1803 for the small sum of $15,000,000, a cost so small that the total sum expended for the entire territory does not equal the revenue which has been obtained from its soil in a single month. The country thus acquired forms today the states of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota west of the Mississippi, Colorado north of the Arkansas, Indian Territory, Dakota, Wyoming and Montana.

Under this treaty Texas was included in the transfer, but the Oregon country was not.

The next expansion of the United States occurred in 1819 when after constant trouble in regard to the boundaries of Louisiana and the great dissatisfaction caused in Spain by Bonaparte ceding Louisiana to the United States, trouble broke out which caused Gen. Jackson, afterwards the president of this country, to march across the line and capture Pensacola. This invasion caused so much trouble that a treaty was negotiated in 1819 by which the whole of Florida was ceded to Spain, Texas was receded to Spain also, while other portions of the treaty definitely stated the exact boundaries of the northern portion of the Spanish colonies.

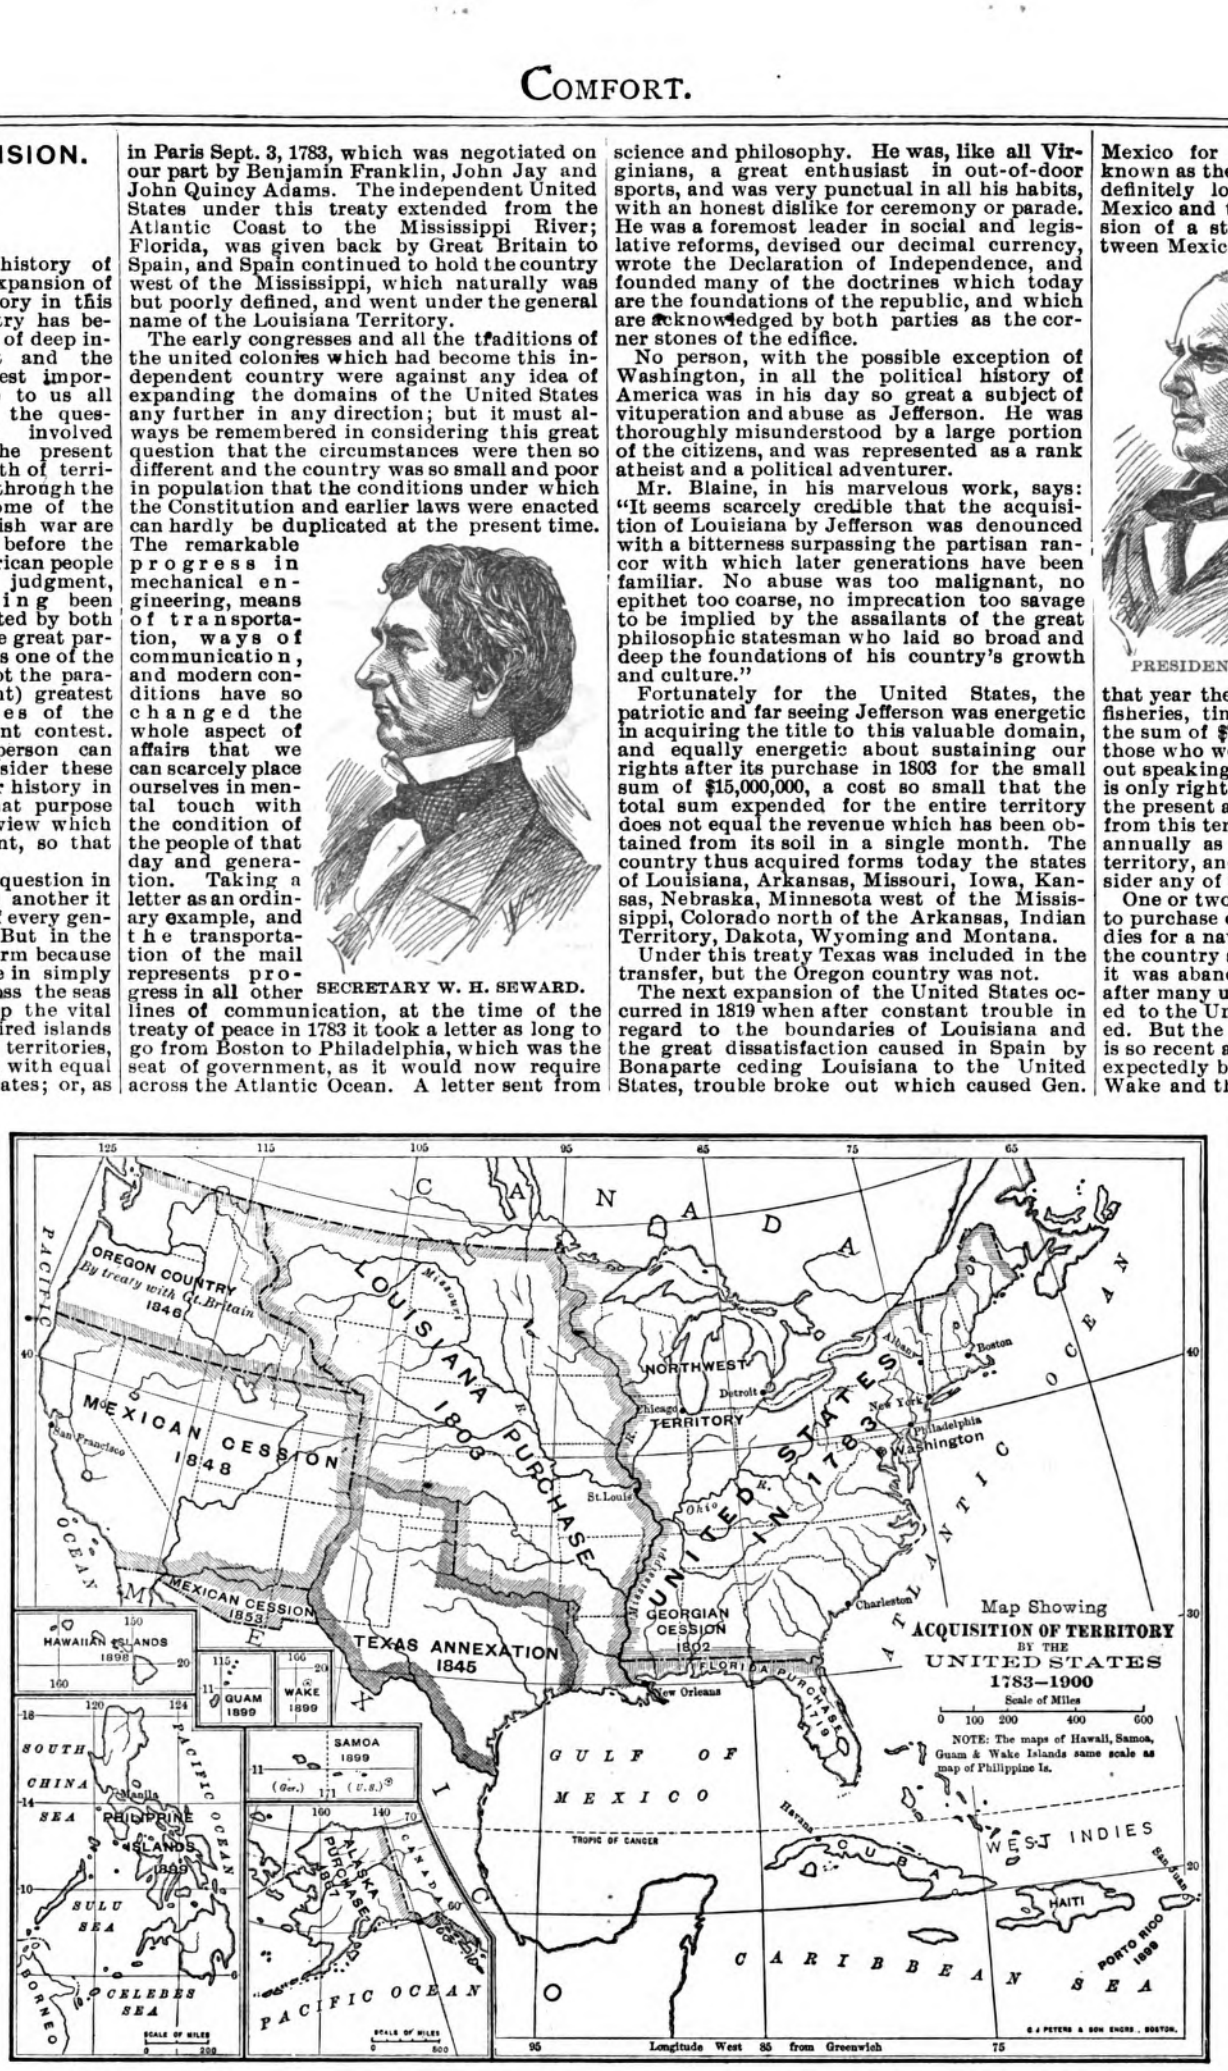
The country did not again expand until in 1845. After the war of revolution in Texas against Mexico, and having gained her independence, the whole state was annexed by Act of Congress to the United States which, with other differences, brought on hostilities and finally war was declared with Mexico which led to our invasion of that country during the administration of President Polk, with many American victories and the subjugation of that country. By the Mexican war was added to the United States an enormous territory equal in area to Germany, France and Spain added together, that which includes the whole of California and the adjacent states. In the meantime, all the country over which the American dominion had been extended was gradually, and at times rapidly, growing in population and wealth. Treaties between the United States and Great Britain, definitely fixing the northeastern and northern boundaries of the United States, gave to America in 1846 what was then known as the Oregon country, and which now comprises the states of Oregon and Washington.

PRESIDENT U. S. GRANT.

In 1853, a strip of territory was ceded by Mexico for a monetary equivalent, and is known as the Gadsden Purchase. This was to definitely locate the northern boundary of Mexico and to terminate the disputed possession of a strip of neutral ground lying between Mexico and the cession of 1848.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY.

The expansion of our territory led to many acrimonious debates in Congress relative to slavery within the new possessions, which finally culminated in the War of the Rebellion in 1861. In 1867 when U. S. Grant was President, Wm. H. Seward, then Secretary of State, completed the purchase of Alaska from the empire of Russia, and in October of that year the vast territory, valuable for furs, fisheries, timber and metals, was bought for the sum of $7,000,000 against the protests of all those who were opposed to Gen. Grant. Without speaking further of the value of Alaska, it is only right to call attention to the fact that the present amount of gold that is brought out from this territory is fully three times as large annually as the amount paid for the whole territory, and this does not in any way consider any of the other assets.



One or two attempts were made at later dates to purchase one of the islands in the West Indies for a naval station, but the sentiment of the country seemed to be against the same, and it was abandoned. It was not until Hawaii, after many ups and downs, finally was annexed to the United States that we again expanded. But the late Spanish-American war, which is so recent as to need no present allusions, unexpectedly brought to us Porto Rico, Guam, Wake and the Philippines through the treaty of peace at Paris in 1899, and today the question of colonies is the one foremost in the minds of many of the people. It being a matter of politics, we will not enter into it at the present time, but let every person draw his own conclusions from the evidence that he may have on either side. But it is well to note in closing that the history of expansion has been practically for 100 years, and there has never been a single act or effort to expand the United States but that it has been coarsely and rudely assailed as imperialism or some similar name, and looked upon as the downfall of the American republic.

By looking at the map accompanying this article the reader will see that COMFORT has explained the acquisition of all the territory depicted therein, excepting the Oregon country. The status of the 299,000 square miles of territory is somewhat different from the others and our claims to this territory rested on somewhat different and disputed grounds which were not fully agreed to until our treaty with Great Britain in 1846. Our claim to the Oregon territory was as follows:

Captain Gray, in 1792, discovered the mouth of the Columbia River and sailed up that river and laid claim to the unknown country of Oregon in the United States of America, and that has always been the foundation of our claim to the Oregon country—its discovery by Captain Gray in 1792. Oregon is no part of our Louisiana purchase, and the maps of the United States, now issued by the Land Office, show upon their face that Oregon was no part of the territory we purchased from France in 1803. Our title to Oregon depends, first, upon the discovery of the mouth of the Columbia River by Captain Gray in 1792. It is a law of nations that any country that discovers and occupies the mouth of a river thereby becomes entitled to all the unoccupied territory watered by that river.

The next ground of our title to Oregon was the treaty of 1819 with Spain, whereby Spain, at the time she ceded Florida to the United States, quitclaimed to the United States all of that territory north of what was then called Upper California.

From a poor, struggling, weak republic one hundred years ago, the United States has expanded into one of the largest countries in the world, and today has more wealth per capita than any nation in the world. Notwithstanding the doleful prophecies which have always been made, the course of expansion in the United States has been attended with equal prosperity; and not only this, but notwithstanding the prophecies that the republic must fall, America today stands among the great powers, if not the leading nation of the entire civilized world. What will be the verdict of the American people relative to the holding of distant lands which we have taken remains to be seen in the result of the general election in November.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE fashion of autograph collecting has been revived, but in a manner greatly modified. The collectors of the present day do not preserve the handwritings of their friends in books, but show an utter disregard for conventionalities and "mount" the signatures in ways which would have been quite undreamed of by their predecessors, and would perhaps have been thought a little shocking. The college girl is one of the most enthusiastic of the several classes of collectors, and her methods of preserving the autographs are perhaps the most unique. For the class autographs she prepares one or more pairs of window curtains of white muslin, and over the surface of each curtain, at all sorts of irregular distances and angles, she has her classmates write their names. After the graduating exercises have become a thing of the past, no more delightful occupation for the summer days at home could be devised than that of outlining these names with the college colors in silks, and no more constant and attractive reminder of college days could be secured than these same curtains hung at the windows of her room.

But the class curtains are not all. The society pillow is held in perhaps even greater esteem. The society colors are used for the foundation of the pillow cover, and the names of those who make up the local chapter are written here and there upon its surface. The center space alone is reserved, and here the society emblem is embroidered. The pillow thus becomes a "thing of beauty" as well as a "joy forever"; an heirloom to be handed down to future generations, especially should some of the names upon it become widely known in the years to come. The signatures are of course outlined with heavy Asiatic silks in some of the society colors.

Often there is a still more intimate circle of close friends, restricted to the favored number who are invited to our college girl's private "spreads." And the autographs of this inner circle are also appropriately preserved. One more formal "spread" than usual is served, this time upon a table over which a luncheon cloth is laid. When the feast has been discussed and cleared, the guests write their names upon the cloth, just as they sit about the table, and another cherished memento of college life has been secured. These names are afterward outlined in white linen, or colored Asiatic silks as preferred.

One enterprising college girl who had a "friend at court," secured the autographs of the college faculty in a similar manner. There was to be a faculty dinner, and the hostess was her friend. She asked permission to furnish the tablecloth to be used on this occasion, and the favor was granted. It is needless to say that a handsome cloth was sent, and the hostess secured for her the autographs of the entire faculty after the courses of the dinner had been removed.

The college girl is not alone in her pursuit of autographs. Society women who entertain distinguished guests are preserving their autographs upon the table linen, either the cloth or sometimes upon the napkins. In either case the souvenirs thus secured are unique and full of interest to succeeding guests as well as to their possessor.

The dainty French ribbon work is being revived by embroiderers and seems likely to take prominent rank in decorative needlework. The work is exquisite and artistic when properly carried out. It should be employed however only upon rich fabrics of delicate shades. This style of work was admired by Marie Antoinette and flourished during her reign. It is sometimes called rococo embroidery. The work is done with narrow ribbons used in connection with embroidery silks, although the silks play a minor part in the design. The patterns are of delicate flower sprays, sometimes combined with scrolls and ribbon garlands. Small flowers are chosen for the designs, such as daisies, forget-me-nots, arbutus and occasionally diminutive roses. The petals of the flowers and the leaves are worked with the ribbon, one width forming a petal or a narrow leaf. The roses are made full by gathering one edge of the ribbon and sewing it to the foundation in a narrowing circle, finishing at the center.

The ribbon used is of French manufacture, narrower than the baby ribbon, and finished without a corded edge. It comes in plain and in shaded tints. The pink, blue and green shaded, and the plain white, are the selection usually made. The ribbon is carried in a crewel needle having a large oval eye through which it may be easily threaded. The point of the needle should be sharp, and only a short length of ribbon is threaded in at one time. As it is drawn through the fabric this is quite essential, as a long piece would become mussed before it could be used.

The fabric upon which the design has been stamped should be stretched smoothly over hoops before the work is begun.

To work, bring the ribbon through from the underside at the tip of the petal or leaf, and push down at the center or stem. A stilletto will be found useful to punch a small hole through the fabric before the needle is drawn through, as by this means the ribbon is less mussed. If however your needle is large this will not always be necessary. Hold the ribbon in place with your thumb while the length is being drawn through, to prevent its becoming twisted. Whenever the ribbon is cut, or at the beginning of work, it will be necessary to catch the end of the ribbon to the underside of the fabric with a few stitches taken with sewing silk of the same shade.

The centers of the flowers are finished with a French knot or a cluster of knots made with Caspian floss. The stems are worked as in embroidery with Asiatic filo in satin stitch. Sometimes the leaves are also worked with the filo, leaving only the flowers to be done in the ribbon. If scrolls form a part of the design they should be worked with long and short stitch in Asiatic filo of a delicate shade to harmonize with the colors of the flowers, or they may be worked solid in Kensington stitch. In making double flowers such as daisies, work the outer row of petals first, and when the inner row is reached leave the ribbon somewhat loose to form a loop or puff, giving the flower a raised effect. This style of work is employed upon the richest pillow covers, glove and handkerchief cases, picture frames, pin cushion covers, and screens, and indeed wherever richly decorative effects are appropriate.

The church fair, the donation party, the singing school and "Miss Jarley" have played their part with such persistency that even to the most ardent charity worker the very idea of any of them is odious. During the past winter some clever women originated an "Antique Sale," and it is a benefit to both parties—those who give and those who buy.

In every household there are always articles of which the owner is tired or which the receding tide of a former fashion has left stranded. Things too good to give away indiscriminately, yet not good enough to give at first hand, have at last a mission. A call is put in the local papers, and all persons interested in the particular charity are invited to contribute old furniture, pictures, books, bric-a-brac, jewelry, china, silver, toys, and even clothes.

All articles should be sent two or three days in advance to the hall where the sale is to be held. There they are sorted, ticketed plainly with the price and arranged in an attractive manner.

AN INTERESTING STUDY.

The various articles should be displayed in classes. The furniture should be arranged attractively and can be presided over by "Little Nell and her Grandfather." The clothes look best on lines, and at a particular sale there were five suits of dress clothes, which, although not in the latest style, were in good condition and brought a fair proportion of their cost price, three of them being bought by students.

The jewelry was displayed in a booth, the table of which was covered with black velveteen; there were sets of gold and silver filigree, cameos and mosaics, and somebody not knowing or not caring for the latest fad had sent quite a variety of pink coral. It was snapped up in a trice. The children's toys, many marked as low as a penny, were in great demand, and when it was noised abroad that such treasures as a "horse with real hair on him," could be had for almost nothing, there was a bargain trade till the table was cleared.

It was at the bric-a-brac table that the most beautiful objects were grouped, and many were the jokes played. "Just see what a pretty inkstand I have bought," said one sister to another. The other laughingly replied, "You paid more than that for it two years ago I fancy." "What do you mean?" was the query. "Why you gave it to me for Christmas two years ago and I never could find a place where it fitted." Everything that was sent was sold, the few articles remaining at the end of the second day were auctioned. Somebody sent a quantity of curious deeds, with the great, round seal of the State of New York attached. These were eagerly bought by people making collections, as were Cuban relics, etc., that soldier boys sent in. A collection of stamps made by a boy who had since outgrown it was the object of such eager competition that it was finally sold at auction and brought a round sum.

The chief merit of one of these sales is that the only labor is the collecting and selling, and the days of toil spent in making aprons and embroideries which no one wants can be cheerfully omitted.

ANCIENT CALENDAR.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE fourteenth of September is called Holy Cross Day and is a festival in the Roman Catholic church. That it was the custom to go nutting on this day is indicated by some lines from an old play:—

"This day, they say, is called Holy-Rood Day
And all the youth are now a nutting gone."

Michælmas falls on the twenty-ninth of September and at this season it is customary to hold elections in England. The origin of this custom is obscure as is also that of having roast goose for dinner on this day. There is an old saying that "if you eat goose on Michælmas Day you will never want for money the year round." It is in reference to this custom that Churchill says:

"September, when by custom, right divine,
Geese are ordained to bleed at Michæl's shrine."

The season has also its weather proverb: "So many days old the moon is on Michælmas Day so many floods after."

A divination much practiced by English maidens at this time is to gather crab apples, cut in them the initials of their lovers and store them in an attic. That which is found in the best state of preservation on St. Michæl's Day represents the strongest attachment.

A GENEROUS OFFER

George B. Wright Discovers a Cure for Lost Manhood and Sends It Free to Every Sufferer Who Will Write for it.

Gratitude is one of the noblest impulses of the human heart and in few instances has this fine quality been so conspicuously exemplified as in the case of George B. Wright of Marshall.

Mr. Wright is a merchant and well known citizen of Marshall, Mich., who was permanently cured of lost manhood and nervous debility after declining health for years. He now devotes his life to helping other men who suffer as he once suffered. Mr. Wright offers to send the medical prescription that effected a cure in his case to every reader of COMFORT who is suffering to-day as he suffered. All who will drop him a letter asking for a copy of the prescription will receive it by return mail free of charge.

The following editorial by A. N. Tally, M. D., regarding Mr. Wright's prescription for lost manhood appeared in the December issue of the United States Health Reports, published at Washington, D. C.

We, as the highest American authority on all matters of health, sanitation and hygiene, are constantly receiving letters of inquiry about a reliable cure for lost strength in men.

Therefore we have ordered an investigation to be made into the subject and our medical staff found there were many so-called cures on the market, but that many were worthless and some actually harmful. Therefore when we came upon the prescription furnished free by George B. Wright, a merchant of Marshall, Mich., we instituted a most thorough laboratory examination and found that its wonderful efficacy depended upon its being exactly compounded according to proper chemical requirements, in order to establish the proper chemical actions and reactions in the human system, and that it should especially, and above all, contain each and every ingredient named in the prescription, otherwise it would be quite inactive and worthless.

Properly mixed and containing everything called for in the prescription, its effect upon the nerve centers is truly wonderful and its nerve tonic properties easily surpassed all ordinary methods of medication.

Among the benefactors of the race may be mentioned the said George B. Wright, inasmuch that he gives this grand discovery free to all who write for it.

Taken according to directions it builds up the weak and restores to full size and vigor the nerve muscles. It brings hope and cheer and lifts up the discouraged man so that he once more enjoys the beauties of nature and the pleasures of life. Failure in business and love surely falls upon him who is weakened physically and mentally, and this sad condition is at once relieved and a new man made of him who uses this prescription.

Therefore, upon the highly favorable report of our medical staff we extend to George B. Wright's prescription for lost manhood the full editorial and official indorsement of the United States health reports. As certain as wound leaves a scar, and as sure as effect follows cause, do men live to repent their follies and indiscretions in weakness and suffering. The tortured sufferer may bear no telltale marks of ruin upon his face to betray his lost manhood. He goes to his grave a human wreck, and never tells of his sufferings for fear of shame. Such mental anguish at times drives him to the verge of desperation, and he is easy prey for those vultures in human form—quack doctors—who hold out alluring hopes of cure only to disappoint, and after robbing him of his money, plunge him into absolute despair.

No one can appreciate the horrors of lost manhood except he who has suffered them. No one can help such sufferers except he who knows a cure and has himself been restored to full manhood. A notable cure of lost manhood in an extreme case was effected in the person of George B. Wright, a music dealer and well known citizen of Marshall, Mich. Mr. Wright for years suffered the agony of lost vital power. He saw his physical power go from him as the result of insidious disease, until he was reduced to a condition of senility, and the best doctors in the country gave him up to die.

Like many others, he tried the various remedies offered by specialists for the treatment of weaknesses peculiar to men, and it was this experience that drove him to a little study and research for his own benefit.

He asserts that his ten years' suffering, both mentally and physically, was turned to unbounded joy in a single night through a rare combination of medicines that literally made him young again. It is the prescription of this discovery that his enthusiasm leads him to offer free to any man, young or old, who feels that his animation or the fire of ambition has left him and needs something that will brace him up and enable him to be prepared for any undertaking which may present itself.

There is no question but what in his individual case the results were just as described, and it seems quite probable that any man who believes himself to be weak may profit by sending for this free prescription. Many people wonder how he can afford to send this prescription free, but it costs him little to do so and he feels a philanthropic interest in giving weak men an opportunity to cure themselves.

A request to G. B. Wright, music dealer, Box No. 770 Marshall, Mich., for his free prescription, will be promptly and privately complied with by return mail.

OUR SPONGE INDUSTRY.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

FLORIDA is the only part of the United States that produces sponges having commercial value. They are found on both its eastern and western coasts, but are far more abundant on the latter, owing to the equable temperature and moderate depth of the water, and the comparative absence of fierce hurricanes.

The sponge grounds of the Gulf of Mexico extend from the Florida reefs to St. Marks, and for a distance of fifteen to twenty miles from shore. The best sponges in color, texture and size are indigenous to deep water, and as these command the highest prices in all markets, the sponging vessels are often at work for days together out of sight of land.

Sponges are known by various names, such as the sheep's wool, the grass, the yellow, the velvet, and others; but only the first three have any commercial value, and of these the sheep's wool is by far the best, being of a soft, yielding texture and very durable. It is well adapted for toilet, surgical, and general hospital purposes.

Sponge buyers pay from $1.50 to $2.50 a bunch for this variety at the kraals, while they only give from 40 to 75 cents a bunch for the grass, and from 15 to 20 cents for the yellow sponge.

It is only of late that the grass sponge has had any commercial value, but many vessels pull it now when the sheep's wool is scarce, as London has recently become a good market for it.

The yellow sponge is used only for the coarsest kind of work, and is scarcely considered worthy of attention by the crews of sponging vessels. It is very abundant, owing to the fact that it has rarely been disturbed. The sheep's wool variety has been getting scarce of late years, and not enough of it can be procured now to supply half the demand for it. This scarcity seems natural enough when we consider that about 200 vessels and over a thousand men have been gathering it for nearly forty years, and making no effort to plant new beds.

The sponge business was begun about the year 1858 in Key West, and has been gradually increasing in importance until it may now be deemed one of the most valuable of our maritime industries.

The first catches of sponges were made along the Florida reefs in small boats, and from this petty beginning the industry has expanded until now it gives employment to about 2,000 people, and keeps a handsome fleet of nearly 200 vessels constantly cruising along the eastern shores of the Gulf of Mexico.

The vessels are well built, staunch and fast sailors, and equal to the best "mackerel men" of New England in equipment. They are supplied with the best of provisions in most generous quantities, and the crews are treated with great consideration.

The sponging vessels owned in Key West may be divided into two classes, the first being the reef fleet, which is composed of small craft that rarely go far from shore, doing most of their work along the Florida reefs; and the second being the main fleet, which includes all the large vessels capable of going on long cruises.

The vessels of this fleet carry crews numbering from seven to eleven men each, and are fitted out with the most modern implements. They carry provisions enough to last them two months, and at the end of that time they return home, sell their catch, and, after being refitted, start out again. Their cruising grounds extend from Anclote Key to St. Marks, and they work these faithfully, every sponge bank being carefully examined through the water glasses carried in the dinghys. The crews are divided into "hookers" and "scullers." The former lie breast down on the bows of the boats, and scan the bottom through the water glass, which is merely a piece of glass inserted in the bottom of a bucket.

In noticing a valuable piece of sponge the "hooker" directs the "sculler" how to move the boat so as to get it in the most convenient position, then insert his pole, armed with three iron claws, under the treasure, and by a quick, vigorous turn of the wrist brings it aboard.

The "hooker" is considered of more importance than the "sculler" as he must have greater experience, in order to tell the character of a sponge in all depths of water. Each boat has a "sculler" and "hooker," and when both are equally expert they take turns in "hooking."

As fast as a dinghey gets a load it hastens to the vessel and after discharging its cargo hurries back to the finishing grounds.

The cook has charge of the vessel during the absence of the boats, and he keeps as near them as he can, so that he experiences little difficulty in picking them up when the men want to go aboard for meals or to deliver their catch. The men are awake by dawn, and at work as soon as it is light enough for them to see what to do.

The crews are mainly composed of natives of the Bahamas, both black and white; though many of the captains belong to the mainland. The Bahamians are said to make the best sailors, as they are obedient, industrious, accustomed to the sea from childhood, and content with small earnings.

They are shipped by the "trips" of eight weeks, and before starting out usually receive an advance varying from ten dollars to twenty and any clothing they require. If married, their families are supported by the owners of the vessels during their absence, no money being called for until the trip is completed. If that is successful, the men may settle their accounts; if not, the shipowner must bear all losses, as he has no redress if they refuse to pay him.

The vessels run into port every Saturday, when they work on the sponge grounds, deposit their catch in kraals, which are mere inclosures of stakes driven into shallow water near the land, and leave it there for a week to soak.

They start off for the sponge grounds again early Monday morning, and on their return the following Saturday with another load they place it in the kraals and the crew devote most of the day to cleaning the catch of the previous week, by striking each piece on the palm of the hand with a short stick until all the refuse is beaten out.

Some of the crew then run a stout cord through pieces of about equal size and quality and throw them in piles on the land to dry, while there they are guarded by two watchmen, who are paid by the entire fleet, each crew paying its pro rata.

The sponges are sometimes sold to wholesale buyers at the kraals, but are generally taken to the home port, placed on a wharf for inspection, and sold to the highest bidder.

The bids are made on slips of paper, handed to the captain of the vessel, and he decides which he shall accept or whether he will accept any, as he and not the shipowner has sole charge of the selling, because he represents the crew.

When the sponges are bought by the representative of a wholesale house they are taken to his warehouse, given over to the care of a number of men called "clippers," who clip off all the ragged ends and worthless parts, and give them the trim appearance they bear in the drug stores.

They are taken from the clipping into the packing room, where they are pressed into bales weighing from twenty to eighty pounds, the former being the usual weight of a bale of sheep's wool, and the latter of a bale of grass sponge. Yellow sponge is usually packed in forty pound bales.

After being tightly sewn in burlap, the sponges are shipped to their destination by steamer lines if possible. The clippers receive $1.50 and the packers $2 a day. Sheep shears are used for clipping the sponges.

It is estimated that there are nearly three-quarters of a million dollars invested in the sponge industry and that the annual value of the sponges taken vary from $300,000 to $1,000,000, as much depends on the character of the weather, the clearness of the water, and the abundance of the material.

The quantity of high-grade sponges secured is never enough to meet the demand, a fact that may be inferred from the reports of the custom house, which show that the United States imported sponges to the value $5,503,203 during the years '87—94. The exports for the same time amounted to only $281,747, but these figures will soon be greatly increased if England continues to be a market for our grass sponge.

TARPON FISHING.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THINK of catching a herring weighing one hundred and fifty pounds! Think of catching this giant with a rod and reel! This sounds like a fish story indeed, but it is a fact. The herring referred to is not the variety that we see smoked in the markets, but a big Southern brother, the tarpon.

This fish belongs to the herring family, so the authorities tell us. It grows to a length of five to seven feet and weighs from seventy-five to one hundred and eighty pounds. It is a beautifully proportioned fish, with a light green back and with very large silvery scales on its sides. While feeding it frequently comes to the top of the water and then disappears again with a kind of puffing noise.

This king of all game fish, as it is frequently called by enthusiastic anglers, is found in the lagoons of western Florida, off the Gulf of Mexico.

The winter season is the best time to fish, though there is that delightful (or otherwise) uncertainty about tarpon fishing that makes the unlucky angler wonder whether, after all, any other season or any other day is not more favorable than the one he has chosen.

We will take it for granted that we are not unlucky anglers and so start for a day's tarpon fishing.

An early start is necessary and a coat will be needed, for winter mornings, even in Florida, are apt to be raw and chilly. A guide is also necessary and every guide has positive information of a place where tarpon are sure to be found—and known only to himself. No two guides agree as to the location of these places, which is perhaps just as well for the comfort of rival parties of anglers. Each guide also is supplied with a large stock of fish stories that would put Ananias himself to shame, but they serve to pass away the time while we wait for the tarpon to bite.

The length of time is an unknown quantity. Perhaps we wait all day and catch nothing—this more frequently happens than otherwise.

When the tarpon does bite, however, he means business. He takes the bait gently and swims off quietly until he feels the pull of the line. Then off he darts like a shot, while the line whizzes through the reel, and springs clear out of the water, shaking his head furiously and sometimes turning a complete somersault. This is the dangerous time for the angler, for if he does not lose his fish on the first jump the line may become entangled around its body and so be broken. The guide, meanwhile, follows the motions of the fish and pushes the boat around with a word of advice now and then. Some anglers let the guide handle the fish at first, but no true sportsman would do this, the fascination of the fight is too strong. After the first jump the tarpon settles down to business. Jumps follow one another in quick succession and the great fish darts here and there, now away from the boat, now towards it. Should the angler relax his attention for an instant, should he allow the fish any slack line, his victim is free, his efforts are lost. At length, however, the tarpon becomes tired—the steady strain on his mouth has its effect—the rushes are shorter, the jumps not so frequent and finally the fish is worked near the boat, fighting for life every inch of the way. Finally when near enough the guide kills it with a gaff.

A good angler can land a tarpon in half an hour, but it is a half hour of steady work—every muscle tense, every nerve strained. Three or four such fish and a man is ready to go home to supper, though on good days some anglers have caught eight or nine. Usually, however, if a man catches one he feels the day well spent—especially if it be his first one.

Unfortunately the tarpon is not esteemed as a food fish, so that those that are not mounted by fishermen as trophies are usually given to the farmers to use for fertilizer.

Origin of The District of Columbia.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

FAR back in our history the story opens—back to the close of the American Revolution, when the seat of the Federal Government was in Philadelphia. There were many unpaid soldiers at that time, for the expenses of the war had been extremely heavy, and the country had much money yet to pay out besides that due to her soldiers. But the men, many of them uneducated and unreasonable, could not understand the delay, and so clamored for their pay, and raised such a disturbance around the old Statehouse in Philadelphia that Congress came to the conclusion that it was in need of a city and a district which should belong exclusively to the United States, for the home of its Government, and for the transaction of its affairs. Accordingly, they caused it to be known that they were open to offers of land for such a purpose, and from 1787 to 1790 they received offers and suggestions, and talked, argued, and even wrangled over the matter. New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Trenton, Harrisburg, and many other places, urged their claims for being made the capital city, and for a long time it seemed impossible to make a selection. Maryland and Virginia both offered ground for the foundation of a new Federal District; many votes were taken, and at last an act was adopted by Congress which was approved by the President in July, 1790, giving to Washington himself the sole power to select a Federal Territory "not exceeding ten miles square, on the river Potomac, at some place between the mouths of the Eastern

THE ELECTRIC FURNACE.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

ELECTRICITY has passed through three stages in development; first it was applied to the telegraph and the wonder of the age was that messages could be sent from end to end of a continent or under the sea; next its power was used for lighting and it is said that should the whole power of Niagara be used in producing one enormous electric light its power would be so great that it could easily be seen from the moon were there any inhabitants to view the wonder, and some even imagine that our neighbor Mars might perceive its brilliance; but now comes the third stage in its development, that is, its use in transmitting power. No longer are cars and carriages propelled by its power, objects of especial interest on our city streets, but its use in furnaces and for heating purposes is not yet common enough to be without interest to the public. Already many of the arts, especially those relating to the working of metals, are being completely changed.

Electric furnaces are simple in construction, consisting of an electric arc, similar to that in the arc light, enclosed in a masonry box or oven. Through the carbons between which the electric arc is formed, a very strong electric current may be allowed to flow, raising the temperature within the furnace to such a height that it cannot be measured but is estimated at six thousand degrees Fahrenheit. Of course such a furnace as just described would be used only in laboratories, but the furnaces of the great electric power companies at Niagara are constructed on the same general principle. They are built loosely of fire brick, without chimney, doors, or drafts. At either side are the electric connections, through which may be carried to the carbon core the electricity which is to do the work required. When that is done the furnace is "blown off," so that the heat is allowed to escape and the heap of fire brick which is left is mere rubbish, for nothing yet discovered can withstand such heat.

But, we ask, what is the use of such heat as this? The answer which the scientist gives us may be something like this: "The heat of the electric furnace will, within a few years, revolutionize the useful arts. The rarest gems which our earth affords will be duplicated by means of this heat, and combined with great pressure even diamonds may be produced by the bucketful. Not only shall we produce, but, by means of the furnace, we may discover how in the ages long gone by the wonderful forces of nature worked on a larger scale than we now work in a small furnace."

So much for prophecy, but what has actually been done? Not many years ago the world had scarcely heard of aluminum; to-day even kitchen utensils are made of it, and this change has been effected by the means of the electric furnace. Clay is heated to such a high temperature that it melts and the aluminum is separated from the impurities. This introduction of a new and cheap material into the manufacture of dishes is a valuable acquisition, as tin has for years been growing more expensive.

Lime and carbon are united in the furnace to form a new compound called carbide of lime, which being dropped into water decomposes forming acetylene gas. This will in time become a valuable illuminant and it is now used almost entirely in France and Germany, but it is very explosive and its use has not been generally adopted in this country, while in England it is forbidden.

Then, too, graphite is extensively manufactured in the electric furnace, and to-day our lead pencils, stove blacking and lubricants of most kinds owe their being to this wonder of the age.

But of all the wonders yet worked by electric power probably the most interesting to us all are the experiments for the production of diamonds and other precious stones by artificial means. Some eight years ago the eminent French chemist, Moissan, announced to the world that he had, in his laboratory, produced genuine diamonds. In an electric furnace he melted pure iron and powdered carbon or charcoal. When the temperature had attained a height of 6000 degrees Fahrenheit the crucible containing the fused mass was quickly plunged into cold water or molten lead so that it was suddenly cooled, causing great pressure to be exerted on the mass. When cold the iron was dissolved by means of acids, and the tiny crystals of the carbon or pure diamonds were left. These are not artificial diamonds. They will answer every test of the geologist or jeweler but they are very small. Think of the common bit of charcoal or carbon lying by the side of the road! Who would for a moment think that it was a near relative to the sparkling jewel on "my lady's" hand? It was not until early in this century that chemists decided that the diamond was composed of only one substance and that pure carbon. Within the last decade it was discovered that diamonds were contained in meteoric iron, that the iron and carbon dust plunging through the upper atmosphere became suddenly cooled and formed the diamond and iron which was pulled to the earth as a meteor. It was by following this clue that Moisson succeeded as he did. The only drawback, now, to the wholesale manufacture of diamonds, is the fact that man has not yet mastered nature's secret of great pressure. Great heat man has attained, but great pressure he has still to strive for.

In a similar way ruby, emerald, sapphire and amethyst might be produced by crystalizing kaolin, which is the pure form of oxide of aluminum; while the ruby and opal might be made from the common quartz sand on our beaches.

Constantly experiments are being carried on by chemists in all parts of the world, but notably at Niagara, where the terrific force of the great cataract is transmitted along copper wires to gigantic dynamos. Already several new substances have been formed and some of the tiny crystals formed have so closely resembled diamonds that it will not be surprising if we hear of the real thing at last being produced—when man has mastered the art of pressure.

In all times and ages man has attempted to understand, to overcome and to reproduce the forces of nature. He is doing the same to-day. Millions on millions of years ago carbon and the other elements existed, were heated and pressure applied so that the crystals we have to-day were formed. Then the sun's heat helped the great tree ferns to grow and to fall, it caused the great volcanic eruptions which covered the forests, heated and pressed them into coal, and to-day man digs that coal from the earth, makes of it carbon pencils through which he carries electric power and attempts the same process which nature used in the days before time was.

BERWICK SPONGE CAKE.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

TO the present generation of New England people Berwick sponge cake is only a name, but their fathers and mothers have toothsome recollections of the excellence of this old-time dainty. Few among them, however, know the origin and history of the delicious sponge cake upon which all travelers through North Berwick, Maine, invariably lavished their small coins.

In 1845, an employe of the Boston and Maine Railroad, named William C. Briggs, had the misfortune to lose a leg through an accident on the road. The railroad Company were somewhat to blame, and Briggs threatened a lawsuit. Rather than submit to this the Company made him several compensatory offers if he would relinquish his purpose, but he was dissatisfied with all. At last he proposed to them that they should fit him up a restaurant at North Berwick, Maine, and agree to halt there for five minutes, every train which passed by. The Company gladly agreed, and the restaurant was started. This was before the days of dining cars and buffet lunches, and travelers were dependent on station lunch rooms and trainboys for their meals. Mrs. Briggs was a famous cook and the restaurant throve mightily, and the Briggs family were already looking up in the world when the fertile brain of Mrs. Briggs devised a new sponge cake, lighter, sweeter and more golden-yellow than had ever been before conceived of. The public—the traveling public—were simply enraptured. No such cake had ever been dreamed of; its fame flew far and wide and it found thousands of purchasers. Every one passing through North Berwick bought sponge cake whether he needed it or not. It was made and sold in all sizes, from the immense loaf in a huge wooden box to the tiny square costing ten cents—the smallest sum for which it could be obtained. It was ordered in quantities for restaurants and hotels and for private people in far away cities.

The Briggs family rapidly increased in wealth; great sums were offered them for the secret of the manufacture of their famous cake, but they refused to reveal it. Every batch of it was concocted by Mrs. Briggs herself, and no one was allowed to watch her as she mixed it. Nothing concerning either her ingredients or her methods ever leaked out except that she beat her eggs in a churn.

For twenty years Briggs managed his restaurant and sold many a toothsome delicacy besides the famous cake—a custard pie of Mrs. Briggs' making having great local celebrity—and at length waxed so rich that he disposed of the business and retired into private life, where he speculated, lost his wealth, and died a poor man.

Submarine Torpedoes and Wireless Telegraphy.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

ONE of the most diabolical of recent inventions is that of wireless telegraphy as applied to the guidance of submarine torpedoes. In its action it seems almost human, and it must be a fearful thing to be on board of a ship which is being chased to destruction by one of these missiles of death. The torpedo in itself is not materially different from those in common use, but it is supplied with two staffs which project above the surface of the water and receive electric waves reaching them through the air and generated by a suitable apparatus on the torpedo boat. To the rudderhead of the torpedo are attached two coils of wire with two cores of iron near them. When an electric current passes around the coils in one direction one of the cores is sucked into the coils of wire; while if the current circulates in the other direction the other core enters its spiral. Now, if it is desired to alter the course of the torpedo, electric waves are developed on the torpedo boat, pass through the air, and are received by the staffs attached to the torpedo. These in turn are made to develop an electric current in the coils of wire, and one or the other of the cores, as is needed, is sucked into its coil, and this movement turns the helm of the torpedo. As soon as the torpedo has turned in the desired direction the waves of electricity from the torpedo boat are stopped.

In this way a torpedo can be made to follow the course of a ship in its flight, and no matter how often its destination may be changed, it cannot escape the torpedo, since this invention enables it to turn as correctly and as frequently as may be necessary to follow and reach its prey. Think of being on board of such a doomed vessel and watching your fate steadily and relentlessly pursuing you through the water, and giving you no loophole of escape! Does not the very thought bring a shudder?

But this invention is at present too costly for general use, and it is to be hoped, too, that the same inventive genius which has evolved this missile of destruction will also furnish a rebutting agency for the use of the pursued ship,—a power which will be able to either destroy or turn back the relentless torpedo.

Queer Uses of Telegraph Poles.

A LONDON paper tells us that when telegraph wires and poles were first introduced in some countries the moaning of the wind through the wires had a curious effect upon birds and animals, and bears and woodpeckers especially were destructive in trying to get inside the poles to discover what was causing the noise.

In Algeria 'tis said that some of the savage tribes made the copper wire into nose rings and used the porcelain insulators as drinking cups.

SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHEAPEST SUPPLY HOUSE ON EARTH, CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

ONE of these days some clever woman is going to invent a corset which shall effectually cover all the needs of the stout woman. To be sure there are dozens of widely advertised corsets on the market, all of which claim to reduce the hips and abdomen, as well as reduce the waist by several inches. If we pause to think a moment we can readily see that by reducing, or compressing one portion the other must suffer. If the corset is tightened at the waist more than is absolutely natural, the flesh is pushed down causing the abdomen to protrude abnormally, also the hips to a more or less degree. I am going to tell you of the device of a young woman who felt and saw herself daily growing stouter and stouter. Drawing her corsets in their usual way was uncomfortable and only resulted in a prominent stomach and big lumps at the hips bordering the corset line. She had a number of celebrated corsets tried on, none of which made her any smaller because they were all long and heavily boned; finally, in sheer desperation, she put on a pair of very short corsets, hardly more than a girdle and found to her intense delight she had found what she wanted. The secret of success, however, depended largely on the way they were adjusted. After they were clasped and before the laces were drawn into place, she pulled them down in front until they entirely supported the abdomen; then the hose supporters were adjusted snugly, helping keep the corset in place. To assist this arrangement, the avoirdupois was lifted and kneaded into the top of the corset. Then the lower lace, composing the waist was drawn comfortably and my lady found herself with the new low-busted figure and declared she had never been so comfortable before. To be sure her waist measure was increased two inches, but her "stomach" was perfectly flat and her lines exceedingly graceful. The theory of heavy, stiff corsets for the stout figures is all bosh. The more pliant the corset the more pleasing the effect.

The English are sending us some stunning things in cloaks for traveling, driving, or rain. One which I considered especially fetching is a dust brown color in a crisp, smooth cloth, impervious to rain and dust alike. It is cut in Raglan form, perfectly loose and finished with a notched coat collar. There are large pockets at the front, and a little silk yoke inside to keep it from getting out of gear. When worn with a suitable hat there can be no more effective rig. All of these new coats are long, to the foot of the skirt, usually thirty-eight inches or four inches from the ground and can be worn with the rainy day skirt.

Another smart style is made up in a silk material, rainproof, in all colors, black, gray, wine, blue and brown. From a square yoke the silk is box-plaited at the back and perfectly plain at the front. A coat collar and large coat sleeves complete the garment.

The latest thing in the way of belts and neck fixings is the application of black velvet ribbon at each. The wide velvet probably two inches in width, is selected for the belt, requiring four and one-half yards. Divide this exactly even, and fasten the center to the center of the skirt band, then draw to the back, cross, and fasten in front with a small bow and long ends. The neck is arranged in the same manner, having shorter ends, however. The fact that the velvet is attached to the garment makes it most convenient of adjustment.

Narrow velvet ribbon is used lavishly on gowns of all sorts of fabrics, both as a binding and in bands laid flatly. A favorite bodice decoration is tiny rosettes of this stuff arranged in rows down the front and at the hand.

One of the daintiest sleeves conceivable is made up in the Bishop fashion quite full at the wrist and fastened with a tiny band of velvet ribbon which ties in a bow knot.

Sailor collars are the latest cry and are applied to all manner of bodices. Usually it is made of some sheer fabric in linen, (tan batiste being a favorite) and delicately finished with fine hand hemstitching or a delicate embroidery. These collars are large enough to reach over the shoulders and impart a wonderfully youthful look to the figure.

The collarless Eton bids fair to be one of our pets during the coming fall and winter. One can easily see how they will adapt themselves to the use of fur collars, etc.

English tailors are crying short skirts; not the abbreviated sort, to be sure, but those of a walking length, clearing the ground all around and doing entirely away with the necessity of tiring one's arm holding them up. However, this applies only to street gowns; trailing skirts are far too becoming and have won their way in our affections too securely to be banished altogether, and so the long skirt will still reign for indoor and evening toilettes, as well as reception and calling costumes. For my part I love even the tailor-mades as long and clinging as possible, and for one shall bid them a reluctant farewell.

Separate waists made up of all-over tucked stuffs, either cotton or silk are much to the fore; the tucks laid bias on both body and arms—made in this manner, with a stock and frou-frou frill of lace or embroidery finishing the front, the effect is remarkably chic. I saw such a waist made up in tan linen batiste, with a stock and jabot frill of batiste embroidery.

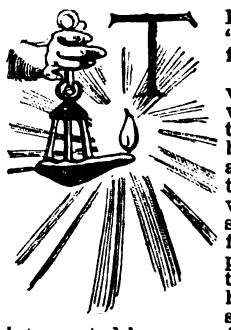
Among this season's most charming models I noticed a costume in sky blue veiling, very light; the skirt was shaped and did not come within two-finger's width of the ground. The pretty small bolero was braided with tiny black velvet ribbon, and opened over a chemisette of white lawn, very simple, having finely frilled sleeves, trimmed at the wrist with black velvet, and extending beyond the sleeves of the bolero which were turned up. The shoes and stockings worn with this rig were of a pale gray color, while the large soft hat of yellow straw had a thick wreath of ivy and a big flat black velvet bow across the front.

Fichus are worn with all possible gowns and go far toward giving an air of daintiness and distinction to a simple toilette. Those made of point de sprit are especially favored; very pretty ones having a set of frills as a finish, each frill bound with narrow white satin ribbon. Sometimes white satin, or a colored ribbon, two or three inches in width is used to fasten them over the breast, forming a bow with long ends mingling with the ends of the fichu.

A dainty little frock of wool in stripes in black and white of equal width has the narrow skirt set together in herring bone fashion, a piping of black velvet intersecting each breadth; at the foot each seam is left open to a little below the knees displaying a hollow pleat underneath, giving a decided flare. The bodice has the stripes arranged horizontally, and has a long, narrow guimpe of tucked white muslin, with full bishop sleeves of the same set off by a band and knot of velvet at the hand. Bands of the velvet pass over the shoulders connecting the bodice with a small bow and steel buckle on each shoulder. The collar is a combination of blue panne and black velvet, while the dash of blue at the belt gives the completing touch.

PERFUMES.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.



AFTER the modiste has modeled and the milliner created there is one very essential thing left. Before "my lady's toilet is complete a good perfume of the right kind is necessary, and if we can't have a conservatory handy we must turn to the manufactured violet, rose, or jasmine.

The story is told that a favorite of an eastern harem was the discoverer of ottar-of-roses. Through her garden flowed (artificially of course) a stream of rose water on whose surface were noticed little oily drops. These she collected in her hand for amusement and to her delight found these drops gave forth an unusually delightful odor. This was found to be the oil or ottar of the rose, and from this incident sprang up the manufacture of this kind of perfume, with its center in Bulgaria. The warm sun's rays with plenty of rich soil are the only requisites in growing the roses which produce a good amount of this oil. The oil of rose geranium is often employed to adulterate ottar-of-roses which is very expensive when absolutely pure. In Corsica and Algiers these geraniums are grown for the perfume market. To get the essential oil the whole plant is put into the still with frequently a few rose leaves added to improve the quality.

Many of our common perfumes, violet for example, are made up of a combination of other things which is a very good imitation of the real flower. When a blossom is as small as the violet the cost of growing and gathering is so great it rarely pays, and a composition of orris-root with other ingredients is commonly substituted. However the French perfumers export the most delicate at the same time there is little real violet perfume in the market and in the south of France this little flower is grown extensively for their use. Here, too, tuberoses are cultivated from which cologne water is made by what is called the "enflowering" process. The flowers are placed in contact with thin layers of grease spread on panes of glass, the blossoms being renewed each day. This lard takes the odor from these blossoms. Finally when it is saturated with the perfume it is steeped in alcohol which too has a strong affinity for odors and so absorbs the essential oil from the grease. Musk is often used to accentuate an odor and to make it more lasting.

Chemists are constantly discovering how to reproduce perfumes without the flowers. From coal oil an odor of carnations has been evolved and perhaps erelong the laboratory will produce perfumes which will replace those obtained by distillation from blossoms.

ORIGIN OF AN OLD STORY.

THE book we know as "Arabian Nights" is founded on this tale:

Once there lived a wicked Sultan of Persia who daily married and the following day would behead his bride. Finally the Vizier's daughter married him and vowed she would do something to turn him from his murderous plans. And she devised this means. She told him a very exciting story which had to be interrupted by cares of his office and in order to hear the conclusion he postponed her execution. Night after night these stories were concluded and another begun and a "thousand and one nights" had elapsed, a period of two years and nine months. During this time the Sultan had grown so fond of his wife that he abolished his cruel edict forever.

This is the sworn statement of a man who was cured:

"My lower limbs seemed to be dying—losing all sense of outward feeling. The most excruciating pains made me almost wild with misery and I could not stand alone. I tried electricity with no avail. Several physicians gave me treatment which was not effective. One day I read of a man who had Locomotor Ataxia, and cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I procured a half dozen boxes, and took them before I was convinced a cure was possible, and finally used one box a week. My pains gradually disappeared, color came to my flesh, I could walk, run and jump, and actually dispensed with a cane."

September as far as the work-a-day world goes marks the beginning of another period of effort. Schools, factories and general business throw off the vacation air and commence to "get up steam." Nature recognizes no such distinction and calls to the crowds hurrying cityward with her most enticing voices. Sky and water and wood do not hear the knell to their reign that September first rings. To those fortunate enough to be able to prolong vacation hours, September seems the best vacation month, for it is the maturity of summer, not the childhood of autumn.

There are many people who endeavor to calm their view of current history by looking at it in perspective. The actual horrors of the situations in China, South Africa, the Philippines and India are depressing to even the most hopeful, buoyant temperament. Those who consider the situation apart from the moral standpoint or from the physical one see in all this the final struggle between the forces and powers of barbarism and ignorance and those of civilization. In the end the greatest civilization must conquer and if we close our eyes to the slips and consider only results it may be the easiest method of avoiding pessimism.

It is rather amusing to find women falling back upon the precedent of history, custom and tradition to prove that a life of ease and luxury was intended for her. A woman lawyer in Chicago recently convinced a jury that her woman client could not be convicted as a vagrant because it was contrary to precedent that women should work. The case was decided in favor of the "vagrant." At the moment that the woman lawyer was clearing her client she was undermining her own right and claim to a hearing as a woman who not only worked but entered a field supposedly reserved to men. There is such a feminine lack of logic in the situation united with a feminine quickness of comprehension that it contains volumes on the "woman question." Women have been clamoring for the right to work for the past quarter of a century. Now one of those who has gained the right defends her sister by throwing over her crime of begging the rose light of custom and tradition.

A somewhat childish fad of European origin is coming into favor in America. This is the card postal embellished by pictures in crude colors. A penny stamp and a colored card make the new postal combination. These cards have long been favorite methods of remembrance from European countries. The pictures of buildings, scenery and persons save the old time descriptive letter. We have imported the idea but have shown a tendency to render it absurd. Bright colored pictures of the presidential nominees with the cheering prediction "Our Next President" indicate the local preference and the general interest. The horrible disaster of the burning ships of the Hamburg American line was selected as an illustration of a recent card. Artistically the cards are a crime and when good taste and delicacy of feeling are both violated in the selection of the subject of illustration one hopes that the fad may be as short lived as the Christmas card craze. There are artistic possibilities in a good illustration of scenery or notable buildings done in black and white and used as a postal card, but the present work is not a thing of beauty and we trust that its vogue may be short lived.

Statistics are often used as a basis for certain conclusions concerning race, national or local characteristics. It is an amusing and harmless occupation and may be a possible basis for scientific deductions on physical or mental characteristics. The old Scripture belief was "As a man thinks in his heart so is he." The modern philosopher who is a practical physiologist often believes "As a man digest in his internal economy so is he." That conclusion might not be drawn from the following statistics. A certain railroad furnished the patrons of its dining car with a printed slip containing three plans for serving meals. "No. 1" was to be the American table-de-hote plan—three meals per day at a dollar a meal. This old time method caught the suffrages of nearly all the travelers from the Eastern and Middle States. "Plan No. 2" was a combination of European and American plan or the familiar "table-de-hote" and "a-la-carte." Field's simple and comprehensive explanation of the terms as meaning that "in 'a-la-carte' you get a part and in 'table-de-hote' all there is," may have been the factor that influenced the Westerners to favor this plan. "Plan No. 3" was to be European throughout the day and foreigners invariably chose this plan. The company decided to put "Plan No. 2" into operation. Hereafter on that line you may choose what you shall eat at morning and noon and regulate your expenditure as your purse and your appetite may exact. At night you must eat what is given you and pay one dollar for the privilege.

August first was observed as Marquette Day in Michigan. The state has a public park on Mackinac Island and a meeting was held there to consider the formation of an association to procure the necessary funds for a statue of Marquette. This is a move in the right direction. The growing interest shown in our own history is constantly seeking expression in the erection of monuments, tablets, statues and the preservation of historic buildings. This is right, proper and commendable, but at the same time there should be a purpose to teach the truth of history through these memorials. We are an English speaking nation today. Our laws and institutions are English but the exploration and subjugation of the continent was but partly due to Englishmen. The French and the Spanish were the earliest explorers. They have left their names as landmarks in many of our states. These facts in our history should be emphasized for two reasons. They show the truth and they also emphasize the fact that while these nations were the pioneers it was the Anglo-Saxon who conquered at last and made the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific all his own. The newer states have made scarcely any effort to perpetuate the names of their early explorers. They have kept local names and added others of like origin but few statues or tablets show the Spanish, French, Dutch and Swedish element that were a part of the beginning. Michigan's statue to Father Marquette in the gallery of National Statuary awakened much foolish discussion. The state should be honored for its historical insight in honoring the names of its pioneers.

The great universities and colleges of our country will enroll a larger number of students than ever before in the history of the nation. Universities like Cornell, that furnish many free scholarships, feel most strongly this popular demand for higher education. Cornell gives many free scholarships to the state and this autumn it has nearly one hundred additional students through this avenue alone. Side by side with this great increase in the numbers of those seeking college training is the decreasing value set upon college degrees as degrees. In the immediate past the man or woman who had a college training had a distinction and consideration from that fact alone. This is emphatically a past condition. It does not mean that such training is not highly regarded as training. The members seeking it discountenance that idea. It is only that the means are lost sight of in the end. There has never been a time in the history of the world where strong, well poised individuality was more highly prized or met with quicker recognition. What you are, not how you became so, is the test that the practical spirit of today applies to individuals. The world does not ask to see college degrees or testimonials of scholarships but only ability to do some one thing well. If the education that a man or woman has had fits them to fill some place in the world's economy, then it is a good education whether gained in the college or in the actual struggle. There is no longer any special distinction in how an individual gets ready to work, but there is constantly an opportunity for distinction in his ability to do work. That college training seems to many the most practical preparation for success in life is shown by the great and growing demand for this instruction. That the same result may be obtained without this preparation is no less evident. College from being an end has become an incident, but it has not suffered in the change.

The question "to tip or not to tip" is spasmodically discussed in America and many high moral objections as well as pecuniary ones are made against the practice. In spite of the discussions pro and con the practice has long been on the steady increase. Now it has received the stamp mark of a legitimate expense.. The United States government finally allowed a disputed bill to be paid, the item questioned being fifty cents given to the porter of a sleeping car and charged as a legitimate expense. This is giving a legal status to what many consider an unlawful extortion. In Europe the practice is so long established that the person who serves you will ask for the tip if it is not forthcoming. The tips there are very small in comparison with the extravagance of ideas on the topic in America. The small tip in Europe is received with thanks but the chilling supercillious manner in which the sum considered too small is received here must be experienced to be understood. If the practice is to be recognized as a part of legitimate expenditure, then some scale regulating the matter should have the force of unwritten law. It has long been understood that ten per cent. of the total cost of a meal was a fair return of the diner for service. It is the bell boy, the porter, the cabman and the chambermaid whose services furnish a sliding scale of extortion or reward as the victim may choose to consider it. The whole idea is opposed to the supposed simplicity and equality of democracy but the reformers have evidently lost the battle. Some time ago an article was written to prove that a person of moderate means could not afford to accept an invitation to some of the fashionable country houses because, forsooth, his friend's servants expected such large tribute that the sum total made the whistle too dear. Now as the government has recognized "tips" it should compile statistics on a scale of tips or establish a bureau of arbitration between him who gives and him who takes.

VALUABLE VIOLINS.

In spite of the enormous prices we often have seen in the catalogues of various musical houses and the common stories of fabulous prices which are said to have been given for violins of famous makes, there have been public challenges in the musical world to cite a single authentic case where a violin has been put up at auction and has brought as high as $5000.

This discussion has led to the publication of very interesting statistics which will claim the attention of all players; but which, unfortunately for the much-believed stories of great sales, show that the challengers knew whereof they wrote. The only case near it is a recent one where a lady wrote to a London paper that a friend of hers had just purchased a Stradivarius built in 1726, at an auction sale in Brussels, bidding and paying therefor $5000. This would have shown the challenger wrong, but on investigation it was found that the auction was held by M. Darche, the Brussels violin expert, and the instrument was found to have been knocked down at $3960.

What is perhaps the finest violin in the world—the Messie—was purchased by a man in Edinburgh named Crawford, who is said to have paid nearly $10,000 for it; but this was not an auction sale. The Stradivarius in the possession of Lady Halle (formerly Mme. Norman Neruda) who some of COMFORT's readers will remember playing in Chicago in 1899, cost her the sum of $2500. This instrument belonged to Ernst and was given Lady Halle by Lord Dudley and other admirers.

When the Russian violinist, Petschnikoff, played in this country a year ago, he brought two Strad violins with him. One of these, a large model, formerly belonged to the great St. Petersburg player, Ferdinand Lamb, and was presented to Petschnikoff by a Russian princess. Many papers refer to this instrument as the most costly one in existence. When the Spanish player, Sarasate, was in America he carried an insurance of $15,000 on his instrument.

Stradivarius violins are considered as worth from $400 to $4000. In his own time one Cervetto, a salesman in London, received a consignment of these violins from the great maker, which he was commissioned to sell at $20 apiece. But owing to what was considered the exorbitant price the whole lot was shipped back to the maker, who, himself, was accustomed to make violins to order for four louis-d'or each. These and many other interesting facts have been brought out by the challenge, but up to the present time the claim remains really undisputed.

If you want to enjoy a feast of good music for practically the cost of postage write to COMFORT, after reading the music offer on another page, giving a list of the music you want. You will be so pleased that you will be a constant user of the offer and will thank us for the benefit it will confer on you and your friends.

Music in Early American Churches.

In most of the churches of the early days no music whatever was allowed, and in some even a pitch pipe was considered profanation. This was largely owing to the prejudices which existed against the music in Roman Catholic churches, and which was still used in the service of the Church of England which retained the Catholic form of worship rendered into English. In 1675 a law was enacted that no one should play on any instrument of music except a drum, the trumpet or a jew's-harp; and as late as in 1735, when one of the splendid organs still in Trinity Church, Providence, R. I., was presented to it by the Dean of Berkley in England, the people in public meeting voted "that an organ is an instrument of the Devil for the entrapping of men's souls," and declined to accept the benefaction.

Thus the wretched psalm singing of our ancestors went on for 100 years with these meager selections without the aid of instruments or female voices. It was bad enough in the beginning and evidently grew worse. Not a single song was composed, and not a single hymn written in America during the century; but by degrees the situation improved and books giving the rules of music were printed. These rules of music threw the churches into commotion, and at one place it was voted, after a discussion of whether the singing in the church should be by rote or note, "That if we once begin to sing by note, the next thing will be to pray by rote, and then comes Popery." It is pleasing to know that this long warfare over the matter of singing lead to many town meetings, as the churches of the Puritans were then supported by the town, and many peculiar laws were passed for localities. In one, singers were to sing half the time by reading one line, and half the time by reading two lines, and many similar laws were passed; but in time the custom silently went out.

JEAN DE RESZKE'S VOICE.

Considerable interest having been aroused by a recent piece in COMFORT relative to the late misfortunes of the de Reszkes, and particularly as to the voice of Jean, it is somewhat difficult to find the true condition of the great singer's health. Reports are undoubtedly exaggerated but are denied with an emphasis that shows the sensitiveness of his friends while not in any way serving to dispel the clouds of doubt. According to late authoritative London sources, Jean caught a chill in Paris previous to his visit to the English capital, and this is accountable for his break-down there. It is also stated that the apparent feebleness of his voice is due a great deal to his nervousness and fear of results, and to the fact that for prudential reasons he has of late been taking things very quietly during the first acts of the opera, husbanding his power until the last act. Notwithstanding this explanation there are many printed statements going the rounds of the press which seem to indicate that many people who have listened to him in any of the late performances have serious apprehensions as to the final recovery of his old-time power.

SAVING MONEY IN MUSIC.

It would surprise almost any of COMFORT's six million readers to drop into the mailing rooms some day and see the great loads of papers going to the mails, but what would much more interest the readers of this particular page would be to see the neat piles of sheet music rapidly melting away before the onsloughts of the mailers hastening to fill the pile of daily orders from delighted patrons who have learned what a tremendous bargain is embodied in COMFORT's music offer which is published from month to month and which appears on another page of this paper.

So incredible does it appear, that real full size sheet music such as costs from 25 to 50 cents a sheet at stores can be sent at practically cost of mailing, that at first one is disinclined to put much faith in it. But one trial leads to such satisfaction and delight that order after order is sent and friend after friend joins the happy circle of those who have found a place to obtain the very best music at a trifling cost. Not only that but COMFORT offers to return your money if you are dissatisfied or if there is any misrepresentation. No wonder, then, at the success of the offer. Read it and see its terms for yourself.

One of the late notable pieces for the piano and one that is attracting much attention from advanced musical critics is a descriptive piece for the piano by Victor Vogel, called "Launched in Life," in which the pleasures and pains of domestic married life are supposedly developed. Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" is incorporated and the composition concludes with the sentiment "Home, Sweet Home." The portion relating to the marriage engagement and the presentation of the diamond is set forth in a most skillful manner and is so true to life that young ladies of COMFORT's editorial rooms who have heard it declare it is true to life and almost as sweet as the actual occurrence, which is certainly a great compliment to the composition.

Not all is trouble in the De Reszke family's pathway. Recently at a court performance of Faust at Windsor Castle the Queen decorated Edward de Reszke with the jewel of the Victoria Order, much to the gratification of that accomplished gentleman.

About a couple of years ago a young Irish child violinist performed in many parts of America with considerable success and great promise for the future. Many of COMFORT's readers will remember little Maude McCarthy, who scarcely seemed large enough to handle the violin she carried. She has recently performed in London with flattering success in one so young, and it is believed that every bright promise for her success will be filled.

Branch and the Conogocheague for the permanent seat of the Government of the United States." The new territory was to be ready for use in 1800.

The final adoption of the Potomac site for the National Territory was brought about by a scheme between Jefferson and Hamilton. Hamilton had just devised his great masterpiece of statesmanship—The Funding Bill—which provided for the assumption by the Government of the debts incurred by the States during the Revolutionary War. This bill had been defeated in the House, after a severe struggle, and Hamilton was earnestly trying to have it reconsidered, and had appealed to Jefferson, who was just then working with all the energy of which he was capable, to bring about a decision upon the location of the Federal District, to help him.

Jefferson invited Hamilton to dine with him on the following day, and also asked two or three other friends to be of the party. The matter was talked over quietly, and it was agreed among them that the two Potomac Members who had previously voted against Hamilton's bill should change their vote, and in return Hamilton promised to use his influence to have the Federal District established on the banks of the Potomac.

Thus the wisdom and shrewdness of these two able men settled a serious difficulty in the affairs of the nation, and placed the city of Washington on its present site.

The Territory was finally decided upon in January, 1791, and comprised one hundred square miles lying on both sides of the Potomac, and including the city of Alexandria. One of the original corner-stones of the District still lies at Jones' Point, near Alexandria, but is now hidden from view beneath the steps of the lighthouse since erected there. The land upon the west side of the river, including the city of Alexandria, was retroceded to Virginia by Congress in 1846, and the District now comprises but sixty-four square miles, all lying upon the Maryland bank of the river.

Chinese Home Life and Superstitions.

WONG ALOY.

THE attention of the whole world has been attracted to China for the last few months, and yet there is no other great country of the real life of which we know so little. Americans are apt to look upon China, I think, as a great mysterious empire, inhabited by a race of strange beings who do not have the same human feelings as ourselves. At least I know that was my own condition until, at the time of the World's Fair at Chicago, I became rather intimately acquainted with many of the Chinese who had come there, and with one man in particular. From that man, Mr. Wong Aloy, I learned much about the country of China which interested me.

Wong Aloy had lived in this country several years and spoke English very well. What is more remarkable for one of his race, he also wrote English very well. Sometimes his use of a word would be very funny, especially the perfect tense of the verbs, but in general his grammar was good and his spelling was remarkable for its correctness. I am sure that if I lived in China for all my life I could never begin to write the language of the country half as well as he could write ours.

Wong Aloy was from a good class home, in his own country. His mother was one of the women distinguished there by having small feet, although not the smallest. The size of the feet of course depends upon how young the child is when the feet are first bound. If the family is a very wealthy and aristocratic one, and the child is always going to be able to have everything done for her, her feet are bound while so small that later in life she can hardly use them at all. Girls who are not likely to be able to have so many servants are allowed to let their feet grow to a size which will allow of their moving about with more or less ease. In speaking of the fact that modern ideas were even then penetrating into China this man told me this:

"My mother has small feet, but when my sister came to the age when her feet would have been bound, my mother would not let it be done, because she said she knew what suffering it caused, and she understood now that it was foolish to have it done."

CHINESE CONVERTS TO CHRISTIANITY.

Wong Aloy has frequently taken me into the temples of his people, in this country, where incense was being burned before the Joss. "Of course," he said, "I have lived so long in this country now that I know how needless that is, but in my own country folks believed in it, and for those of my people who come to America strangers, unable to speak a word of the language of the country, it is a great comfort."

I asked my friend to write out for me, once, some of his impressions of his childhood in China. The part which refers to these religious beliefs is interesting. I give it just as he wrote it, incorrect spelling and all:

"My pet name which my folks give me, which was 'sick cat,' its meaning that I was liable to meet death at any time on the account I was weak and sickly. During my early home life in the age of eight to ten I have a great deal of sickness and I was suffer with the typhoid fever.

"My mother believed that the evil spirit made me ill. Of course you understand that the Chinese are superstitious, especially the female sex. My mother tried every ways to help me, and the doctor called most every day, but help me very little. My mother used go to the 'joss house' to worshipped the idles, and she have the faith in them. Some time she took life chicken, rice, liquors and such things. Sometimes she would took cakes, candies and sugar canes. There is no doubt it took away her fortune by her foolishness and superstitions."

One of the most interesting Chinese customs of which this man told me was closely connected with this superstition in regard to his illness. He had been telling me about the fondness of the Chinese for flying kites, their skill, and the many unique kinds of kites which they have. He then told me about the kite festival which is held every year on the ninth of September. On this day all the children are given kites to fly, and sent out to a hillside beside some stream of running water. It is believed that on this day the kites have the power to take from the little fliers any illness which may be hovering over them in the form of evil spirits. After the evil spirit has been drawn off into the kite, the kite is taken down to the river bank, a hole punched in it, and it is held under the running water. The evil spirit is washed out and drowned, and the child is freed from its influence. I let Wong Aloy tell his own story about this:

"One day my mother brought me a kite, but I was ill and unable to flew it, but my dear kind sister one day she took the trouble to flew my kite up in the airs and let me hold the string to enjoy myself. But unfortunately I was so weak and the kite got away from me, and the way my kite went, so fast, and I never see it again within a very few moments.

"After that my sister used took me out to the hillside to watch the other children to flew their kites, and I enjoyed it very much. Just few days before the ninth day of September came my mother brought me another kite for the sake believed on that custom, and have the faith that the kite will take away my sickness.

"When the ninth day of September came my mother sent my sister with me to the beautiful river bank just one eighth of mile away from my home. My sister helped me flew the kite, and then hold it while I punched a hole in it. Then she put it under the water and I hold it there."

Human nature—of children and grown up people, too—does not seem to be very different in China from what it is in the United States, as this man's story of his early experiences will show:

"I remember when I was six years old my mother received a message from my grandmother which stated that she was very ill and not expected to live, and she want to see my mother at once. Of course my mother went to visited my grand-mother. At time I was out playing with the other children, but my mother knew that when I went home, first I want it will be her, but she told my sister what to do in order to satisfied me. When I was tired playing, and kinder hungry, I went home. The first thing I wanted it was my mother.

"'Mamma,' said I. My sister put her beloving arms around me and said, 'Mamma be here soon. Come have our supper.' After supper my sister undressed me and tried to put me in bed, and I knew there was something wrong.

"'Where is mamma?' I asked.

"'She be here soon, dear,' said my sister.

"'Oh, no, I will not go to bed without mamma,' said I with the sorrowful tone. My sister tried to comfort me, and to coax me to bed, but I would not do anything but cried, 'mamma, where is mamma?' and kept up the same tone about half an hour.

"My sister went to my bedside and tried to comfort me, and wiped the tears of my eyes, but I scratched her face and tore her ears and tore the ear-rings from her ears, so at last my sister get out of patient with me and sent for my aunt. She went in and took me in her arms and walked up and down with me, and said, 'Mamma be here soon." But I still crying. So finally my aunt also get out of patient of me, and she knew that I was afraid of the strangers, and then she said, 'Now Aloy if you don't be keep quiet and be a good boy I am going to put you out of doors and let the strangers to carry you off, and you never see us again.'

"And then she walked towards the door, and I said, 'Aunt, I will be good boy.' So my aunt put me in bed again and fanned me for some time, and wiped the tears from my eyes, and by that time I was tired and went asleep."

Is not this threat of "the strangers" interesting, in view of the reports which come to us of the fear which many ignorant Chinese are said to have of the missionaries? I have read of one riot incited because some one said that the missionaries enticed Chinese children into their houses and murdered them.

In the light of this insight into a Chinaman's memories of his home life, something which Mrs. IsabellaBird Bishop has just printed in regard to the influence of the home life of the empire upon its political present and future is interesting. Mrs. Bishop has traveled extensively in China and probably is as well able to write of the conditions there as almost any one. She says:

"In China the unit is not the individual, but the family, indivisible and sacred, the members of which are bound to each other in life and death by indissoluble ties, of the strength of which we cannot form a conception. Villages consist of groups of such families, with their headmen and elders, who are responsible for each individual, the step above them being the hsien, or district magistrate, who may be regarded as the administrative unit. The Chinese have a genius for self-government and are by no means the 'dumb driven cattle' which some suppose them to be. The villages are self-governing, and no official dares to intrench on their hereditary privileges. Every successive dynasty has found itself bound to protect them in these, and no 'Son of Heaven' who called them in question could occupy the 'Dragon throne' for six months. Another cause which tends to counterbalance the evils of the administration is the system of strict surveillance and mutual responsibility under which no man stands alone, and which as a vast network holds China together. This has its own evils, one of which is mutual distrust, which has, however, the good result of preventing men from combining intelligently against the government. The system makes government easy, and certainly does not tend to disintegration."

UNCLE SAM'S NEW SNAILS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

UNCLE SAM has recently acquired by conquest immense numbers of the most beautiful snails in the world. They infest the Philippine Islands, most of them living on trees. Some have shells of an exquisite blue in color; others are green, and others yet are prettily banded in a great variety of patterns. Those of darkest hues are found usually on the trunks of the trees, while the bright-colored ones occur on the branches and among the foliage.

Of recent years naturalists have taken much interest in the snails of that archipelago, partly by reason of the remarkable variations of coloring shown among some hundreds of species. If any evidence were required to show that the Filipino is a person of exceptional ingenuity, it would be furnished by a description of the method by which the guileless native counterfeits these mollusks for gain. By the skillful manipulation of a hot poker and one or more simple tools, he produces shells of patterns new to science, and sells them to the unwary collector as representing hitherto undiscovered species.

When the hot season of the year arrives, the Philippine snails go to sleep, glueing themselves to the trees, and blocking the entrances to their little houses with a sort of air-tight door composed of a substance which they excrete. So securely do they attach themselves that they can hardly be detached without breaking them; but, when the dry and heated term is over, they wake up again, dissolving the temporary door and resuming business at the old stand. It is a curious fact that a snail, if shut up in a drawer, will resign itself in a similar way to slumber for an indefinite period, and there is record of instances where specimens kept in this manner have been revived after half-a-dozen years by putting them into warmish water.

"THE LIGHT THAT WON'T GO OUT."
Every family in America is ready to buy "The light that sells on sight"—the wonderful new invention called ARC-LIGHT WICK.
It burns a whole year without trimming. It kills a candle, discounts kerosene, beats gas, and almost equals electricity or sunlight.
It gives 20 per cent. of oil. It's clear, white and brilliant. It's the light that won't go out. It's the light in the window for thee.
The Light That Sells On Sight.

The ARC-LIGHT is something new. All need it, all buy it, all bless it. To show it means to sell it, and it yields from 100 per cent. to 300 per cent. profit to agents.
The same kind of carbon that gives the electric light its brilliancy is woven into the Arc-Light by a patent process. We hold affidavits showing that an Arc-Light burned 1040 hours, giving the last hour the same perfect, brilliant, light it gave the first.
A single lamp manufacturer in New England, who bought over 50,000 wicks, says: "The Arc-Light beats all others. It sells our lamps, and turns night into day." Every home, store, hotel, saloon, hall, church, or car company will buy the Arc-Light Wick on sight. We have made arrangements with the manufacturers to introduce this wonderful discovery, and we offer for 60 days the following wholesale terms to agents:
Medium or A wick, 5-8 inch wide—the size for house lamps—by mail, sample 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $2.50. Small or B wicks, for table, hall, store, or bracket lamps, 1 inch wide, sample, 5 cents. $3.50. D wick, 11-2 inches wide, for incubators, hall, bracket, or store lamps, sample, 8 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $3.50. Argand wicks for 33 cents dozen; parlor lamps, sample, 10 cents; per gross, $3.50. On all orders for $10.00 accompanied by the cash, 15 per cent. off. Send for sample dozen, giving width desired, and see how they go. We can supply you with any style ARC-LIGHT WICK in any quantities, from a single wick to a thousand dozen.

DEAR NIECES AND NEPHEWS:

Vacation is over, and everywhere we once more view the spectacle of

"the whining schoolboy, with his satchel
And shining morning face, creeping like a snail
Unwillingly to school."

The schoolboy, however, is not the only one among us who undervalues his privileges, and frets and chafes at his daily duties, thinking them irksome and sighing to be rid of them. "Blessings brighten as they take their flight," and too often we discover, when too late, that our despised and grudgingly performed tasks are our greatest blessings, and our hours of toil the happiest part of our lives. The lesson of contentment with our lot, of using each day and hour as if it were to be the last one granted to us, of seeing the pleasant side of every event and duty, is a hard one for most of us to learn. But enough of moralizing. Let us turn to sheep-shearing.

"In this, the central part of Texas, sheep-shearing is done but once in twelve months, usually in May. In some portions of the State, where brush and brambles abound, the sheep are sheared both in spring and early fall, as the sharp thorns and bushes tear out the wool if it is allowed to grow for a full year. Of course under such circumstances wool-growing is not so profitable as in this section, for the shearing expenses are doubled and a six months' clip does not sell as well as one representing a year's growth.

"Shearing machines are little used here and by far the greater part of the work is done by bands of Mexicans. Their leader, or, as they call him, 'the Captain', makes all contracts and is held responsible for the work done by his entire party. They are very merry at their work and their tongues seem to run as busily as the large, sharp shears with which they rapidly snip the wool. These shears must be frequently ground and sharpened as the dirt in the wool soon dulls them.

GOING TO PASTURE.

Great care is taken to avoid cutting the sheep and to keep the fleece unbroken, and when the last lock falls it is all carefully rolled together and tied with heavy twine. Both skill and practice are required to tie wool properly. The tags are all thrown in the center and only the white, unsoiled part is left in view. As the fleeces accumulate they are placed in large sacks that are suspended from a frame and arranged to swing clear of the ground. As a sack begins to fill, a man climbs into it and firmly tramps the contents. From its greasy nature, wool packs well and the average weight of these sacks, when hauled to market, is two hundred and twenty-five pounds.

"Ram's wool, black wool and dead wool are sacked together and when sold bring but two-thirds as much per pound as first-class wool. Dead wool, in the wool-growers parlance, means the wool picked from sheep that die from poverty, age or disease.

"Although our great State has within its borders more sheep than any other in the Union, very little of our wool is spun, woven and manufactured here. No doubt some of our New England readers could give us an interesting account of the different forms and processes of labor involved in the changing of 'raw wool' into ready-made clothing."

MRS. AUSTA AUSTIN, Atherton, Texas.

Gertrude LaFrentz of Chicago sends us a description of Admiral Dewey's visit to Chicago last May; but as we all read of that in the daily papers at the time I'm afraid I cannot spare room for it now. We thank her, however, for her kind thought for us. I am afraid she forgot that articles are at least three months old when they finally come out in COMFORT.

The following letter is from an old subscriber to and reader of our paper.

"This story is true. In the foothills of Smith Mountains, San Diego county, Cala., is a large Indian reservation, supported by the Government, which also carries on there a school especially for the education of Indian children. In 1894, when I visited that part of the county on a camping trip, a young, beautiful and talented American woman was teaching. She cooked her meals and lived in a house adjoining the school house, and being at a great distance from an American neighbor, she had one of her nieces with her for company. One evening she had a call from the Indian chief himself. In an ugly way he demanded money of her to buy wine. Alarmed at his behavior she tried to coax him, telling him she had no money in the house but would go to town the next day and get some to lend him, but he insisted upon having money at once. At last she succeeded in getting rid of him for the time, but after she and her ten year old niece had retired for the night some one knocked. The aunt got up, but the child slept on until awakened by fire and smoke in the room. The little maid called her auntie, but receiving no answer she thought she must have fled and forgotten her. So, gathering all her dolls in her arms she ran to the nearest Indian hut, where she was made comfortable until morning, when, to their surprise and horror, the remains of the little school teacher were found in the burned house. The chief was arrested, but other Indians proved him to have been far from there at the hour of the fire, and to this day no one knows who murdered and burned the little school madam."

NOLIA FREEMAN, San Diego, Cala.

Now let us cross the ocean for a time and visit the Scottish Abbey of Melrose.

"'If thou wouldst view fair Melrose aright,
Go visit it by the pale moonlight;
For the gay beams of lightsome day
Gild, but to flout, the ruins grey.'

"We were determined to follow Sir Walter Scott's advice as given in his 'Lay of the Last Minstrel', and so when we arrived at the little village of Melrose, we chose the inn that overlooked the old Abbey. We were much afraid it would prove cloudy and we knew there would be no Johnny Bower with his two candles as substitute for the moon, so amusingly told of by Washington Irving in describing his visit to this spot. But Nature favored us, for there was a beautiful moon and we stayed up until long past midnight and looked out upon the ruins of the grand old Abbey.

"Melrose is a wonderful specimen of Gothic architecture, one of the finest in all England. A square tower rises in the center of this church to a height of eighty-four feet. Only the west side of it is standing. Visible from where we stood was a magnificent five-light window richly decorated in the upper part, and in a state of perfect preservation. But the grandest of all is the great east window, thirty-seven feet high. Its tall, slender shaft ornamented with delicate tracery, which Scott has compared to 'willow wreathes turned to stone', stood out clear in the moonlight and made a picture one could not soon forget.

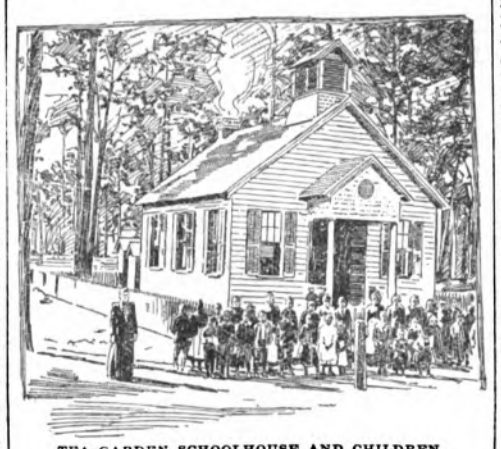
"Melrose Abbey was founded in 1136, and the monks who lived here were the first order in Scotland. Later this monastery was destroyed by fire and was rebuilt at a vast expense by Robert Bruce in 1326. There were at that time of course several buildings, and all was encircled in a wall one mile in circumference. But now all that remains of Melrose Abbey is the chapel.

"The following morning we visited the interior of the chapel. The principal entrance is through a fine Gothic doorway. Within this old church flowers and grass were growing. The sun shone brightly in, for the roof has long ago crumbled away. Architects from Edinburg and other cities come to Melrose to get inspiration from the wonderful work to be found here. The part above the high altar is singularly beautiful, being covered with finely carvelled work, while the chancel is richly ornamented with groups of flowers. In the cloister we find the remains of the same beautifully carved flowers, of which one architect claims that the finest botanist in the world could not desire better.

"The graves of many persons distinguished in Scottish history are here at Melrose. But there were two that interested us especially. One was the resting place of the heart of Robert Bruce. As we stood there and placed a bunch of Scotch heather and daisies upon the spot we recalled the story as told in history. How Bruce requested his heart to be carried to the Holy Land and how Douglas started on the pilgrimage, but was killed by the Moors in Spain. Then how the heart was rescued and finally brought back to Scotland and interred in Melrose. The other grave was that of the wizard Michael Scott. A flat, mossy stone, broken across the middle, marks the spot. Here, as told by Scott in the 'Lay of the Last Minstrel', was where Deloraine came at midnight and visited the wizard's grave, and wrenched from his lifeless hand the magic volume that gave the secrets of his witchcraft.

"We left Melrose the next day carrying away with us very vivid recollections of the old Abbey and its surroundings."

ELIZABETH WOOD, Batavia, N. Y.



Our cousin, George Johnson, has sent us an account of the burning in April last of Convention Hall in Kansas City, and a list of the meetings previously held in it, together with a description of the rebuilding which was in progress when he wrote, all of which show much evidence of care and painstaking on his part, but I fear would be an old story to my readers by the time this number of COMFORT reaches them.

A pleasant letter from a long-lost cousin, Miss Rosie Strasy, of Iron River, Michigan, lies before me. Welcome back to our band, cousin Rosie. As to the matter of sending a story to COMFORT, read the directions given on the first page of the May number.

From Melrose Abbey to a modern tea garden is a long leap, but not at all too much for the mental powers of my readers, and they will find the following letter on the latter subject very interesting.

"The only tea farm in the United States is here at Summerville, S. C., a charming town in the pine woods twenty miles from Charleston. Only it is not called a 'farm', although it comprises a hundred or more acres. That is one queer thing about the raising of tea; the land on which it is grown, no matter how extensive, is always spoken of as a 'tea garden.'

"Dr. Shepard, who owns the garden, began to experiment in raising tea at Summerville over ten years ago. It was a long, slow business, because he had to try a great many different kinds of seed and soil before he could make the plants grow successfully. Then, too, it takes a plant four years to get so it bears well. Now, however, he has succeeded, and when I first visited the garden he was about finishing picking a crop which, from one small field of less than an acre, had yielded three hundred pounds of dry tea, worth a dollar a pound. Dr. Shepard makes only black tea. Most people think black and green tea come from different species of the tea plant, but this is not so. The difference comes wholly from different processes of curing the leaf. A tea plant in good condition is from three to four feet high. The top is pruned off frequently so there will be many branches. This is because only the new leaves will make good tea. Just the tip of the branch and the first two leaves are picked. Then the plant will start a new shoot which will grow so it can be picked again in ten days, and this can be kept up for six months of the year. What is better still, a garden once started can be picked for no one knows how long. There are gardens in India and Ceylon which have been picked every year for two hundred years. Dr. Shepard hires negro children to pick for him. Each child wears a trout basket hung about his or her neck and the leaves are dropped through the square hole in the lid. They are paid six cents a pound for picking and make good wages. Dr. Shepard has built a school house on his 'garden' and hires a teacher so that the children can have a good school to go to when they are not at work."

MAX B. THRASHER, Summerville, S. C.

Our last prize letter tells us of a landmark of old Revolutionary times.

"Situated in the eastern portion of North Carolina and county seat of Halifax County, is the little town of Halifax. It is one of the oldest and most renowned towns of the state, and its people, in the days of the Revolution, were most brave and courageous. It also has the reputation of being the first town in the state to celebrate the Declaration of Independence after it was declared in Philadelphia. Here, also, the first Congress was held. In the suburbs, and distant perhaps one hundred yards from the depot, is the old 'Grove House,' once occupied by Mr. William Jones and his wife, both of Revolutionary fame. In the midst of a grove of oak trees it stands an almost ghostly reminder of the dark days when our glorious Union struggled for freedom, and not in vain. As one approaches the house one sees that the once spacious yard is overgrown with weeds. The rotten doorsteps creak as one enters the lofty apartment once known as the reception room, the walls of which are richly adorned with old time fresco work. Beautiful carven wreaths, flowers, angels and dainty cupids all testify to its dead and gone splendor.

"In this house, perhaps in this very room, did Mrs. Jones almost mortally offend Colonel Tarleton. It was just after the Battle of Cowpens, and Cornwallis and his men were quartered in the town of Halifax. Tarleton and his company were quartered with Mr. and Mrs. Jones. Colonel Tarleton was defaming Colonel Washington, saying he 'would like to see Colonel Washington, as he had heard he was very illiterate and scarcely able to write his name.' 'Ah, Colonel,' replied Mrs. Jones, 'you should know better, for you bear proof on your person that he can at least make his mark.' (Colonel Tarleton had been wounded on the finger by a sword in the hands of Colonel Washington at the battle of Cowpens.)

Under these trees did Washington address his little band of brave and daring patriots and incite them to freedom. But alas! the glory of the house has departed and the ruthless hand of decay is upon it. The broken roof, the paneless windows, the hingeless doors all bear proof of neglect and age. So I pass out of the old doorway with many reflections on its departed glory and the noble people who once occupied it."

Here is a very interesting letter on Trenton High Falls and Gorge.

"These falls, formed by the descent of West Canada Creek, on the direct route to the Adirondacks in the Empire state, rank second with Niagara Falls, having no rival in picturesque beauty this side of the Rocky mountains. The creek, rushing along, swollen to a mighty torrent by early spring rains and floods, falls over successive rocky ledges in a chain of charming cascades, between perpendicular walls of solid rock; the constant wear of the stream, through the limestone strata, ever widening and deepening its bed. Twisting through its water-hewn path, the stream—its Indian name Kauyahoora, Leaping-water—precipitates itself into a rugged amphitheater, lined with living green; then, gathering itself into mighty strength, it plunges down into an apparently unfathomable abyss, whence, swirling and foaming, it finds an unseen onward outlet.

"The descent to the bed of the stream is by a stairway of one hundred and twenty-seven steps down into the Great Flume, which has walls smooth as masonry, towering one hundred and fifty feet above. Going up stream, over smooth, natural flagstones, through a gray old glen adorned with flowers, mosses and ferns, the Narrows are reached, where the crowded waters rush turbulently along. The hoarse voice of the falls, screened by the great rock forty feet high, seemingly extending across the chasm, is heard before they are seen. Turning a point, however, the first, Sherman Fall, comes to view. Back in distant aeons this fall made a detour, leaping forty feet across the chasm, cutting out a large amphitheater in solid rock; wearing away in the edge of the precipice, through which it pours like an inverted water-spout. Here the walls rise highest; the roar of falling water is loudest; here rises continually the spray, above which trembles in evanescent beauty the fragile, mist-wreathed rainbow.

A stone stairway cut in solid rock, with stout chain balustrade, gives security to the tourist passing around the gorge under the shelving rocks to the precipice, where the waters plunge with deafening roar.

"Onward a point is rounded, where the Narrows can be seen through the chasm and a vestibule opens to view the High Falls, triple and perpendicular. From the second floor the water, before like cascades of molten gold, bleached from its lovely amber falls in a sheet of alabaster foam, plunging over the third floor in a solid, shining volume. Here is, indeed, a picture in true water-colors, surrounded by its rocky frame embroidered with wild flowers and evergreens. And the falling waters have a rough cadence of mighty melody, into which come, to intensify, undertones and breaks of awful silence.

"Beautiful and unique is Alhambra Cascade, its domain entered by a rounded gateway in the walled rock; a column-like rock beyond bearing on its surface a mass of stones and earth, in which trees have found root and tower skyward. A mile farther on Prospect Fall passes over a solid rock one hundred feet wide, the Trenton limestone clearly showing through the veil-like thinness of the water. For three miles an upper path skirts the long chasm through a natural park back to the entrance of the falls. Where the volume of descending water is greatest the perpendicular walls near each other so closely that the sky is hardly visible from the banks of the creek, in the chasm below. Near the shores the water swirls and eddies, while out in mid-stream the falling torrent, ever singing its wild song and dashing its spray, oft changes color reflected from gray rock and evergreen tree.

"Lavergne Fenn's" letter has been read and Aunt Minerva returns thanks for it.

Alliene Conn sends a bright letter descriptive of her home in Moorefield, West Virginia, but it is crowded out and I can only thank her for it.

"The 'Pinnacle' at Cumberland Gap is a delightful place, and people come from far and near to view its wonders and its beauty. The best way to reach it is to walk from Cumberland Gap to its top. On the way are met stones of various hues and shapes and about half way up the mountain are curious caves. From the top of the Pinnacle one sees a view which stretches away into four states—Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia and North Carolina. The pinnacle rock is very much like a chimney towering hundreds of feet up into the skies."

BY EVERETT G. WHEELMAN.

THE unparalleled demand in this country for motor bicycles has found American makers almost wholly unprepared to supply it, with the result that far-seeing and shrewd cycle dealers here have been employing agents in Europe to secure for them the American rights for various makes of the two-wheeled self-propelled vehicles, the manufacturers of which are prepared to begin shipment at once. Among the first Americans to secure the agency for a foreign motor bicycle are the Banker Brothers, of Pittsburg, famous racing men, who are now marketing the Werner motor-cyclette, an illustration of which is here shown. This motor bicycle is manufactured by Werner Bros. of Paris, and resembles an ordinary bicycle in construction, although somewhat heavier, especially the front forks, which are re-enforced to bear the weight of the motor, which is carried in front of the head. The motor is supported on th tops of the front forks and the handle-bar stem, and the entire mechanism turns with the movements of the handle-bar in steering. Attached to the front wheel is a pulley a few inches smaller in diameter than the wheel itself. From this pulley to a much smaller one on the motor shaft runs a belt for transmitting the power. The gasoline tank, spark coil and battery are carried in the frame of the machine and are so compact as to interfere little if any with the rider's legs when he assists the motor up grades or against head winds. The rear wheel is fitted with a coaster brake, and the engine is started in the usual manner by the rider making a few revolutions with the pedals. Once started, the rider may use the pedal as footrests or to assist the motor. The weight of the entire machine is but sixty-five pounds.

The trouble with the introduction of a motor for a bicycle is that the motors made thus far to be attached to a bicycle or tandem are cumbersome, heavy and unsightly. With most of the motors the average wheelman would not care to push the load even on a level road. Electricians are at work trying to devise a scheme for a storage battery with most of the mechanism concealed in the tubing of the frame. One firm believes that it has discovered a method which will prove to be practicable and the claim is made that little additional weight will be added to the machine. The majority of the bicycle makers are progressive men, and while they would welcome any motor which would prove to be practicable when attached to a single wheel, most of them say that the time for the introduction for such an invention has not arrived yet. It is said that the expert mechanics are now at work at some of the factories upon a wheel for next year which may astonish the cycling world. The bicycle is to be a "two-speed" affair, and it will have a coaster brake, a cushion frame and no chain. The "two-speed" arrangement has been tried with varying success and failure for several years, but it never met much popularity. A rod will extend from the handle-bar to the rear hub, so that a slight pressure of the finger will change the gear from, say, ninety used on a level road, to about sixty when a hill or head wind has been encountered. There are many little points of excellence being considered for next season.

A New York city inventor has disposed of his patent rights in the ingenious bicycle motor here shown, to a company formed for the purpose. The main feature of this device is the unique method of transmitting power from the motor to a friction pulley, which is in contact with the rear tire. The motor wheel and the friction wheel are each provided with sprocket wheels, the power being transmitted by means of small chains of the kind usually seen on bicycles, the complete motor and fittings being sold for $100. The friction wheel is of aluminum bronze, and presses on the sides of the tire, thus avoiding wear on the tread. A coaster brake should be used in connection with this motor, in order to rest or assist the motor at will. The wheel here shown is fitted with a gasoline tank, carrying sufficient fuel for a 75-mile journey. After starting, which is done by the rider setting the regulating lever and giving pedals a few turns, the entire apparatus may be controlled by one lever, located near the handle-bar.

FRICTION MOTOR ATTACHED TO BICYCLE.

There are few buyers of bicycles who understand that the style of brazing the joints has to do with the general strength of the wheel. Some of the old riders do, and they are strong in their adherence to some particular style of brazing. The general impression seems to be that of the ordinary styles of connections, one is just about as strong as the other. When makers show something out of the ordinary in reinforcements they claim that theirs is the only strong construction for a bicycle.

Brazing, as about one-half the wheelmen of the country know, is accomplished by covering with brass the inside of one tube and the outside of another, over which an end of the first one fits. Then enough heat is applied to make the tubes red hot. When the heat is withdrawn the joint is firmly made, and the point of connection will stand as much strain as any other part of the tube. It is plain that if the two ends of tubes were merely brought together and fastened at the ends the joints would not be as strong as if the tubes were lapped. This gives rise to the name of lap-brazing, which many people believe to be the only form in which the ends are lapped. This is not so. It is simply the name given to the first form of brazing of this character. Lap-brazing is properly the form used to fasten one tube to another at an angle. One tube is split and the end is drawn around another and brazed in that position. This lapping is the same as an outside reinforcement. Subsequently the name was applied also to the outside joint where the tubes meet end to end. One advantage that this manner of brazing has over others is that the connection is made on the outside of the tube and a wider surface enters into this connection.

The Northwestern Railway of London has just tried a new car, built especially for the transportation of bicycles belonging to passengers. The system adopted is the device of Mr. Boff, a Rugby official of the company, and seems about the best which has yet been put into operation. The van is furnished with two sets of holders or clamps, each of which, easily adjusted to the height and length of the bicycle, holds it immovable. One set is fitted to one side of the van, and the clamp, grasping the handle-bar, holds the machine upright on the floor apart from its fellows. The other suspends a second row of bicycles from the roof, where the handle-bars are securely hooked to a bar running the whole length of the car, the rear wheel resting on a deeply grooved plate folding down from the side of the wall. When not in use these clamps fold up against the side wall and are out of the way. Each car can accommodate forty-four bicycles as well as other luggage, and each bicycle can be got in at an instant and cannot be jolted out of its place or in any way disturbed by the motion of the train. It is the intention of the company to build twenty similar vans for the summer traffic.

A veteran tourist gives this advice: "I have more than once heard wheelmen explain that when that moment arrives to them which arrives sooner or later to every wheelman—when a brake alone stands between them and death or serious injury to others besides themselves—they can do all the stopping necessary by the application of the sole of the boot to the rear portion of the front tire. I trust no rider will allow himself to follow so inconvenient and dangerous an example. No coasting can be indulged in, no sudden braking is possible, and there exists always the possibility of the foot being jammed in the fork, as happened in the late accident near London, where a wheelman was found lying dead on the road by the side of his mangled, brakeless machine, with one foot fixed in the front fork. Evidently the unhappy man had come to his end by this perilous method of attempting to arrest the progress of his machine.

Some discussion is going on as to the proper position of a woman on a bicycle. For a long time women sat low in the saddle, far back, with the peaks up in the air, and the handles high and awkward. This season there has been a distinct change. The riders now prefer high framed machines and saddles well forward. The position thus effected is more dignified than the old style, but women should be careful not to raise their saddles too high. It is not infrequent at present to see a woman rider just able to touch the pedals at the bottom of the stroke with her toe. This means that she loses considerable pedalling power. The exact distance of the pedal at the bottom of the stroke should be such that the rider can hold the pedal with her heel.

"There goes a rider who knows how to ride a wheel," said an agent whose store overlooks a cycling thoroughfare. "You will notice," he continued, "that she rides easily and that from the waist up her body does not move. It is maintained always directly over the center line of her bicycle; that is why the front wheel runs straight and does not swing from side to side as you notice it with so many women riders, and even with a great many men also. Neither does she lunge forward with her shoulders at each pressure of the pedals. What is the result? She maintains a smooth, even, steady gait, and seems to be riding without effort. She is getting all the speed out of the wheel that she is capable of, but if she practiced the objectionable tactics I have mentioned she would not be able to ride so fast or so far. You will also notice how rapidly her feet are moving. It is plain that she is riding a low gear wheel, possibly sixty. Right here lies one of the greatest troubles women riders have. The gears are altogether too high. In the effort to keep up with their stronger brethren women are riding gears anywhere from seventy to eighty-four. Whether through carelessness, or because they think there is a demand for them, most makers are equipping women's wheels with gears above seventy. This practice will eventually do more to injure the bicycle than any amount of talking will undo. As soon as the point where cycling is an easy exercise is passed, harm is being done. When a woman looks ungraceful on a wheel, in nine cases out of ten the fault lies in the gear of her bicycle. In the years when a gear in the neighborhood of sixty was considered high for a woman there were far more women riding wheels than there are to-day. I would advocate the use of a fifty-two gear for a woman who finds difficulty in pushing a higher one. It is foolish to argue that it is not pleasanter to make more revolutions of the pedal with less muscular effort."

One of the interesting features at the Paris Exposition will be the bicycle racing, which is set for September 9 to 16, thus giving Americans ample time to get in good condition before they start for the other side. The conditions governing the races will be as follows:

The races are open to professional or amateur racers, possessing the license of the Union Velocipedique de France, or licenses recognized by the Union Velocipedique de France. Entries close August 21.

No entry will be received unless it be accompanied by the entry fees, fixed as follows:

Grand prize of the Exposition, 20 francs.
Premium race, 5 francs.
Handicap, 5 francs.
Tandem race, 5 francs a man.
Interrigional race, 5 francs a man.
Criterium of middle distance, 10 francs.
Fifty kilometre race, 10 francs.
Grand race of the nations, 5 francs a man.
Foreigners' prize, 5 francs.
Gold cup race, 50 francs.

All the races except the handicap and the premium race will carry the absolute necessity of starting.

In the following trials, criterium of middle distance, fifty kilometre race and gold cup race, the entered contestants must show to the committee for the race a sufficient number of pacemakers, in default of which the racers entered may be refused.

The entries must contain the name and surname of the racer, his address, his nationality, his colors.

One of the oddest uses to which bicycles have been put this year is mounting a corps of detectives upon them. A bodyguard of six detectives, supposed to be Scotland Yard men, have been following the carriage of Queen Victoria on bicycles to guard her against dynamiters. These riders have been going through this daily task for the past two months. Each day when Her Majesty goes driving the wheelmen fall in behind, and turning when the royal carriage turns, follow it throughout the ride. The secret was out when spectators noticed that the wheelmen followed the mounted police into the guarded grounds of the Vice-Regal Lodge. It is not yet developed whether or not the escort is mounted on wheels made by those "enterprising Americans."

Many riders have a horror of toe clips. They imagine that the foot is held as in a wedge so that it is impossible to dismount quickly. As one who formerly rode without clips, but who for the last three or four years has regularly used them, I can say that this danger is only apparent. One's foot comes away quite easily from a toe clip. On the other hand, the clip is a distinct advantage in that it keeps the foot firm, affording a steady hold. When running at high speed down hill one does not lose the pedal, as sometimes happens when there are no clips.

Some call it lazy to mount a bicycle from the curbstone and rather undignified to hop along the road on one foot, with the other on the step. The best way to mount, in the opinion of experts, is to hold the handle-bars easily, walk along the left side of the machine rather sharply, and then, without stopping, put the left foot on the step and spring into the saddle. A good rider always seizes the moment for doing so when the right pedal is on the upward move, so that his foot catches it at the summit, and he is able to pedal right away.

Two bicyclists passing through a small town on the Long Island shore, decided to take the train from there home. Being unfamiliar with the place, they stopped to inquire of a colored woman the way to the railway station.

"We are strangers," they said, "would you kindly direct us to the station?"

"Certainly, sir," she replied. "Keep a goin' on till yo' comes to de corner wha de ole post-office used ter be, den tu'n to yo' lef' an' you'll go right to de station."

As they rode off she beamed with pride, they with amusement; and, although they found the station they have yet to discover the "corner wha de ole postoffice used ter be."

I must repeat what I have already said many times, that I cannot possibly undertake to give the addresses of dealers either in this column or privately.

Julia Ward Howe Tells How She Wrote the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

MRS. JULIA WARD Howe was eighty-two years old, May 27, 1900. She is just three days younger than Queen Victoria, who was eighty-two the twenty-fourth day of the same month.

Few women of half the age begin to accomplish the work which Mrs. Howe has done at eighty. Her long life has been lived in the very thickest of the affairs which have made history during her time. The wide knowledge of men and things which this experience has given her, coupled with the discerning judgment which she has always displayed, makes her advice and counsel sought by those who are interested in public and philanthropic work, while her personal charm of manner makes her no less sought for the pleasure which is to be derived from her society. As a result there is hardly a day in the year when she is not asked to address some club, preside at some gathering or advise some one as to the best way of carrying out some task which has been undertaken.

How well she does all these things one has only to see her to know. Her step may be a little slower, her hair a bit more gray, with each year, but if this be so the sweet dignity of added age charms away any appreciation of the fact.

I do not mean by this that Mrs. Howe does not fully realize her years. She does; and refers to them openly, often with such delightful humor that it is plain age has no threats for her. Not long ago, when she was speaking at a meeting of women in All Souls' Unitarian Church, in New York City, Mrs. Howe's voice grew tired, so that she was not able to make those in the back part of the building hear her plainly. Some one sitting there asked, "Can Mrs. Howe raise her voice?"

"No," replied Mrs. Howe, frankly, adding, "I said yesterday that I should not kill myself, even for this august body. You can't expect an old lady of eighty to explode in one gigantic effort."

There was a general laugh at this calm statement of the situation, and then the women in the back part of the room, young and old, elegantly dressed, went forward and sat down flat on the floor in the aisles and around the platform, the only unoccupied space, that they might be where they could hear the rest of the address.

About the same time Mrs. Howe presided at a meeting of the Authors' Club, of Boston. When she rose to speak, to introduce Colonel Wentworth Higginson, who was to deliver an address, she said: "I don't know why I should occupy the position I hold, except that every well-regulated family has an old grandmother who often has the best chair. She is not expected to say much, for she does not speak the same language."

A little later she said: "I cannot help remembering when it was said, 'Who ever reads an American book?' Now it may well be asked, 'Who does not read a good American book, as often as it can be published?'"

No doubt Mrs. Howe is best known to the Nation in general as the author of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." There are few who cannot repeat some or part of that lyric which begins,

"Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord."

There is a martial swing to the hymn which, let it once be heard, makes it cling in the mind and heart as does the melody to which its lines are oftenest sung.

I have heard Mrs. Howe recite the Battle Hymn more than once, and often amid very striking surroundings, as once in the Old South Church, in Boston, but I find that one special occasion is going to remain fixed in my mind, both for the sake of the associations connected with it, and because Mrs. Howe at that time told her audience how she came to write the hymn.

On the nineteenth of April, of every year, there is a service at Concord, Massachusetts, to commemorate the Concord Fight, that inaugural Revolutionary battle to which Paul Revere's wild night ride through the Middlesex farms roused the settlers. A few years ago I attended that service. One feature of the celebration that year was a great meeting of children and young people, whom Mrs. Howe was to address. This meeting was held in the historic old First Church of Concord, the same building in which Revolutionary meetings have been held, and in which Revolutionary orators have shouted defiance.

The First Church is one of those bare white "meeting houses," of the style of those early days, a style which has a dignity all its own, impressive in its very simplicity. The pulpit is large and high. On this occasion an enormous American flag had been flung over the pulpit, and when Mrs. Howe came out on the low platform to speak, her whole body was outlined against this flag as a background. Those who had the meeting in charge had shown their good taste by leaving the simple beauty of the church unadorned except by this one flag and by two great jars of magnificent Easter lilies, placed one at each end of the platform. Any one who has seen Mrs. Howe can imagine what a beautiful picture she made as she stood there between the lilies, in front of the flag, especially when, in reciting the poem, she came to the lines,

"In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me;
As He died to make men holy, let us die to make men free,
While God is marching on."

Her story of the writing of the Battle Hymn, so nearly as I can tell it in her own words, was this:

"When the War of the Rebellion began it was a very great sorrow to me that I could not do something for my country. Other women whom I knew had sent those whom they loved, to fight, or perhaps had even gone themselves, as nurses. For me, though, the way seemed closed. My husband at that time was in too infirm health to go as a soldier and my children were not only too young to go themselves but so young that I could not leave them, even if there had been a way opened for me to go. I felt it was a great hardship.

"After the war had been in progress for some time I went to Washington in company with my husband and my pastor, Rev. James Freeman Clarke. We were to transact some business in connection with one of the committees organized to help the cause. While there we drove out one day some distance from the city to see a great review of troops which had been planned. There was a very large force of soldiers encamped about Washington then—many thousand men—for the enemy were reported to be close at hand. While this review was in progress there came a sudden alarm, a rumor of a skirmish not far away, and great confusion was the result. The review was given up, and the troops poured back towards the city. The road was so full of men that our carriage could drive only very slowly. All around us, in front, behind, and spreading out on both sides into the fields, were the men. There was uneasiness and concern everywhere. Finally some one in our carriage began to sing 'John Brown's Body.' Some of the men who were nearest caught up the song, and then others, until soon there was a great volume of song. It cheered and reassured us.

"After we had stopped singing Dr. Clarke said to me, 'Why do you not write some new words for that music, Mrs. Howe? Such a noble melody as that deserves them.'

"I said that I had thought that myself, and had tried to write something which would fit the music, but had never been able to produce anything which seemed to me worthy of it. The matter was not discussed afterwards and I forgot all about it before we got back to the city.

"The next morning I woke suddenly from a sound sleep, long before my usual hour for waking. There was only the very faintest trace of daylight. I could not see that anything had wakened me. As I lay there in bed the first lines of a hymn came into my mind, the lines beginning,—

"Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord.

"Other words followed. I rose and throwing a wrap around me, found pencil and paper, and there in the early dawn, in light so faint I could hardly distinguish the lines I traced, wrote out the whole of the hymn. It was all done in a few minutes. One line came to me as soon as the preceding one was written. When the last was written I went back to bed again, went fast asleep and slept until my usual time to rise.

"The hymn became popular at once, and soon came to be spoken of as a great help to the cause which I loved. The lesson which I learned from it was that if one really wants to do something for some one else, for humanity, for country, for God, God himself will open an opportunity in His own time and way. Just have the disposition and the chance will come."

The most renowned natural bridges in the world are in the Western Continent. Two in South America; between Bogota and Quito; one in Virginia, called the "Natural Bridge of Virginia," over Cedar Creek; one in Kentucky, in Carter County, and one in Alabama.

A SHEEP PEST.

SHEEP raisers in New Zealand find that their flocks are greatly annoyed by a bird called the kea, or mountain parrot. This bird attacks the sheep and with its strong sharp beak pecks through the poor animal's hide to get at the fat under the skin. How this habit started with the birds is uncertain and various explanations have been offered, among them one quite interesting and plausible.

In the hilly district of New Zealand grows a kind of lichen which resembles a bunch of wool, and at the roots of which are found grubs which are the favorite food of the kea. Probably the birds were misled by the resemblance at first, and finding the sheep good feeding ground have developed the new habit.

The largest known cave in the world is Mammoth Cave of Kentucky. It is about one hundred and thirty miles from Louisville, in Edmonson county. It was purchased by Col. Crogan, of Louisville, about seventy-two years ago, for $10,000, and so celebrated did it soon become that he was offered, a short time after, ten times as much. But he was not willing to sell it, and he so arranged it in his will that it must remain in his family for two hundred years. It has been explored for fifteen miles or more in various directions, and it is a resort for sight-seers from all parts of the world.

$3.00 a day sure. Without doubt a great opportunity. For particulars see last page of this paper.

CONDITIONS.

To have one's hands read in this department, by Digitus, one of the finest living palmists, it is necessary to observe the following conditions:

Impressions of both hands must be sent, fully postpaid and having the name, address and nom de plume of the sender enclosed in the package also.

The package must in every instance be accompanied by the names and addresses of eight new subscribers at twenty-five cents each, the whole amount, $2.00 being remitted, with the package, addressed to COMFORT PALMISTRY CLUB, Augusta, Maine.

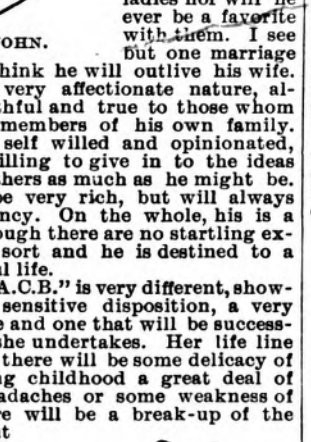
No notice will be taken of impressions and requests for readings unless the sender has fully complied with the above conditions.

To take impressions, first hold two large pieces of blank paper over a candle or similar flame, until they are heavily coated with the smoke. Then lay these pieces down, smoke side uppermost on a pad of cotton. Now place the two hands, palms downward, one on each sheet of paper, pressing firmly and steadily down, but taking care not to move the hand. Keep them so for one minute and lift carefully, so as not to disturb the impression. Have ready some fixatif, which can be bought at a drug store or an art store or made with gum arabic and water in an atomizer. Spray this over the impressions before they are moved and allow them to dry. Then they are ready to send.

Smoked paper impressions are the best. But if it is desired to send a plaster cast, take plaster of Paris and dissolve in water to the consistency of thick cream. Pour this into a large shallow dish and when it is hardening place the hand, well-greased, palm downward, in the plaster, pressing downward. Several minutes will be required to get this impression and great care must be taken in removing the hand, not to break the plaster. Casts are exceedingly difficult to send without breaking and should be very carefully packed in a box with the name of the sender written on it. Putty is sometimes successfully used in place of plaster. A good photograph if sufficiently well taken to bring out all the lines, can also be read, although in all cases the smoked paper is the best, if properly treated with fixatif.

Bear in Mind that all the above conditions must be observed.

Also, that letters not complying with them will go into the waste-basket. Readings cannot appear for several months after impressions are sent.



IT may be well to state at the beginning for the benefit of others as well as for that of "W. H. S., Jr.," that when a back number of COMFORT is wanted for the purpose of seeing your life readings or any other reason, any number may be had by applying to the publishers at Augusta. We editors of departments do not keep a lot of back numbers by us, but the publishers will be glad to supply any number that is wanted on the receipt of five cents.

The first hand which I shall read this month belongs to "Tullas John." He has a good strong hand showing a long life and good health after he comes to be fifteen or so. The life line is uncommonly long and he will live to be well on towards a hundred. He has not had the courage of his convictions always and he is always a little afraid to start out with new ideas. He prefers being guided by others to looking after his own affairs and for that reason will be more successful when in business with others than he will in running a business for himself. He is a faithful, conscientious worker, honest and trustworthy. He will be a favorite with the men for whom he works, but he is not much given to the society of ladies nor will he ever be a favorite with them. I see but one marriage for him, but I think he will outlive his wife. He has not a very affectionate nature, although he is faithful and true to those whom he loves, or to members of his own family. He is somewhat self willed and opinionated, evidently not willing to give in to the ideas and wishes of others as much as he might be. He will never be very rich, but will always have a competency. On the whole, his is a good hand, although there are no startling experiences of any sort and he is destined to a rather uneventful life.

TULLAS JOHN.

The hand of "A.C.B." is very different, showing a nervous, sensitive disposition, a very ambitious nature and one that will be successful in whatever she undertakes. Her life line is long, too, but there will be some delicacy of health and during childhood a great deal of trouble with headaches or some weakness of the brain. There will be a break-up of the health at about fifty, but I think the subject will live on a great many years after that and perhaps see the best of her life then. A line running from the inside of the life line, or the edge of the Mount of Venus straight up onto the Mount of Jupiter indicates a very strong ambition and the square with which it ends shows that there will be a protection from the evil effects of such an ambition. The fate line is very strong and very successful. A person with such a fate line as she has in her right hand could scarcely fail of success. She has the endorsement or the help of some woman early in life, but after that depends more upon her own resources and will marry between the ages of twenty-five and thirty. She will gain wealth and distinction, especially after she is thirty-five years old and she has great gifts for the platform. If she were to go on the stage or even on the political platform, she would make a great success. She will travel a great deal and her life will be broken up by a constant succession of events. There will be no dullness or lack of variety in her life, nor is there in her character. On the whole, hers is a very fortunate and very interesting hand. She is very attractive to the opposite sex and will always have plenty of admirers. She is very faithful in her affections, however, high minded and trustworthy. She is poetic in temperament, loves art and good literature and will make a good musician.

A. C. B.

In sending hands for reading this winter, please be careful to follow the directions given above.

I am going to give you a few rules for observing the head line:

In its best aspects it should leave the line of life at its immediate commencement and make a strong ray across the hand to the top of the Mount of the Moon without ramifications or branches. Such a formation gives us good sense, strong will power, clear judgment and cleverness. If it is too short, it shows either a weak will or an early death. If it is chained and branched, it gives a weak uncertain mind and if it is unequal in thickness it gives avarice and a want of spirit. If it is long and straight across the hand covering the entire hand it also denotes avarice and parsimony. A long line of head gives domination to the character and self reliance. If a hand is much lined and covered with fine rays which indicate nervous and excitable temperament, a long head line with it, such as in the hand of "A. C. B." for instance, gives great self control and coolness in difficulties.

If the head line remains joined to the life line way out under the Mount of Saturn, it shows that education and brain development came late in life. A sudden death is foreshadowed by a short head line when the life line is short also. The head line must lie at a good regular distance from the heart line throughout the length. It is not a good sign to have the space between the head and heart lines narrow at one end and wide at the other.

At the same time an extremely good head line will over-rule bad signs in the hand, especially if the Mount of Mars is high. The combination of the Mount of Mars high and a good head line, gives energy, coolness, a power of resistance, circumspection and constancy that well equip a man for his battle with life. It is a bad sign for the head line to stop under the Mount of Saturn, or even under the third finger, as that indicates inconstancy and a disordered mind. When it is joined to the life line too long before leaving it to go across the hand, it shows a lack of confidence in one's self.

When the head line turns under the finger of Saturn and runs way down towards the wrist it is a pretty sure sign of suicide. This sign, however, should not be confounded with the one which sometimes traces an oblique course to a point part way down on the Mount of the Moon, which indicates imagination and idealism with a romantic tendency towards mysticism and even folly. If this line drooping down the Mount of the Moon in that way cuts the line of health in both hands, it indicates a tendency to insanity, but in an otherwise strong hand the head line drooping onto the Mount of the Moon gives a love of the occult and the superstitious and in many instances a talent for literature.

The line of head coming low upon the Mount of the Moon to a star, if accompanied by a weak heart line and corresponding stars on the Mount of Venus and Saturn indicate hereditary insanity.

A break in the line of head, nearly always indicates an injury to the head and especially so if it is under the finger of Saturn with the broken ends overlapping. If the line is much broken up it is a sign of headaches and general weaknesses, such as loss of memory and a lack of quick ideas. If it is split throughout its length with the other indications of madness or insanity, it is unfortunate, but if instead of being split it is accompanied by a second line thus making a double head line—it is a sign of good fortune and inheritances. If the head line is forked at the end with one branch descending onto the Mount of the Moon it is a sure indication of a deceitful, lying nature. A cross in the middle of the line foreshadows near approaching death and if the line is cut by a multitude of little lines, there will be many illnesses and headaches. Red points on the line indicate wounds, white ones, inventions or discoveries and black ones illnesses of some kind. A star upon this line is generally a sign of a very bad wound bringing danger or folly with it.

If a line from a spot in the head line connects with a star on the Mount of Venus, a serious disappointment in love is indicated. If a line from the head line ends in a star on the finger of Jupiter, it is a sign of extremely good luck.

BICYCLE SURVEYS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

A NEW way in which the bicycle may be utilized is reported to have been recently discovered. By means of a simple recording attachment to the machine, a rapid topographical survey of a piece of road may be made, and with no more exertion required on the part of the surveyer than simply wheeling over it.

The recording device consists of two parts: a cylinder revolving mechanism that carries a roll of paper, and a device that makes the record on the paper. The cylinder is a horizontal shaft, turned by a belt attached to the crank axle of the bicycle.

As the cylinder turns the strip of paper is unwound from a spool. The marking device hangs from a pivot, and adjusts itself to the position of the bicycle. As the bicycle goes down hill the marker moves further toward the edge of the paper; as it goes up hill the marker travels over the paper in the opposite direction. Along level ground the marker simply makes a straight line.

The paper used is ruled with parallel lines, and the gears of the pulley that run the paper cylinder are so arranged that the distance ridden can be computed by the amount of paper unrolled. The vertical distance of the marks is also accurately gauged. In the machine described, one foot of paper was unrolled for every seven hundred and ninety-two feet of road ridden over, while a hill one inch in height on the paper was four hundred inches in height in reality. It is said that the United States Army is experimenting with these surveying machines, which it would seem would prove reliable and trustworthy scouts, recording rapidly, accurately and in convenient form, with scarcely any trouble the exact contour of a piece of road. A general could easily decide from this data the practicability of any route for his heavy guns and supply wagons.

In a trial recently made in Pennsylvania, nearly fifty miles of road were surveyed, and a map connecting one of the militia camps with other surrounding camps was made. Besides the surveying machine the bicycle carries a cyclometer and a compass, and a sketch of the directions as well as the grades of the routes was made. The whole time for the actual surveying was only nineteen hours, which is remarkably quick time for this work.

This brings to view another use to which the machine may be put; that of making road maps for bicyclists and teamsters. Such a map would be extremely valuable, as it would give grades as well as distances.

One of the records recently made by this machine was of a piece of road in New York. The rider passed over the road at a considerable rate of speed, but the record was found to agree exactly with a previous record made by regular surveyors.

A PENCIL THAT WILL THINK FOR YOU.

LIGHTNING CALCULATING PENCIL.

By a Twist of the Wrist this Little Wonder Solves all Mathematical Problems as Quick as a Wink.

The Great Profit Maker of the Century.

All Problems Solved. Short Cut to Results. A Quick Sum Total. No Mistakes Possible With Sunshine's Calculating Pencil.

Here is the only reliable never-failing standby. It is the neatest educational novelty of the day. This pencil is a marvel of ingenious mechanism, and a great profit maker for agents.

You will hardly believe that this pencil can figure quicker and more accurately than you can. It will calculate anything from 1x13 to 12x24 in the twinkle of an eye. It gives you 144 combinations and is absolutely correct. It can't make mistakes. It is made of pure Aluminum and attached to a Faber Pencil. Fits any ordinary pencil. It has a good eraser. It protects your pencil point. It is a pencil lengthener and stays in your pocket.

Let Sunshine's Calculating Pencil do your figuring and give your head a rest. A sleepy man will get more accurate results with its aid than a wide awake calculator could get without it. Simple and solidly made. Interesting and instructive to everyone. You can't think half as quickly and accurately as this pencil does it for you. Teaches children more in one hour than they learn in a week in any other way. Simple as a clothespin to manipulate, a child can learn to work it in five minutes, it never blunders, is easy to see through. Tell your friends and teachers about this wonderful device, it's the greatest educational novelty out. Interests dull pupils as well as bright ones. Creates enthusiasm in mental calculation and helps in the most difficult subject with which both teacher and pupil have to deal. We send full directions with each pencil so you can get it ready to work as quick and easy as you open a jackknife. You can multiply quicker than an expert, a lightning calculator. Get one to-day.

The Educational Value of this Arithmetical Pencil is based on the highest Multiplication Table it contains. Every person should know it. Yet many never learn it. They are thus hindered in acquiring quickness and accuracy in mental calculations so necessary to business success. It is especially recommended to young people starting in business life and to those with neglected education. Teachers recommend it to their pupils because the use of the pencil imparts a knowledge of these figures in ⅓ of the time required by the usual methods. Even the Indian office of the U. S. government has recognized its educational merits and recommended that the superintendents of all Indian schools be supplied with samples.

SPECIAL OFFER. These Calculating Pencils sell for 25c. each, but we are anxious to show you how wonderful they are so will send one free to all who enclose 15c. for a six months' subscription to SUNSHINE, the great monthly, two pencils and a year's subscription for only 25c. CONDUCTED BY AUNT SARAH.

"A PALE young man with feeble whiskers and a stiff white neckcloth, came walking down the lane en sandwich—having a lady, that is, on each arm."—Thackeray.

It is stated on good authority that the term "sandwich," which is generally understood to mean two slices of bread with meat between, originated about the end of the eighteenth century, from the fact that a certain Earl Sandwich was so fond of playing cards that it was exceedingly hard to get him away from the gaming table long enough to eat his meals—so the butler was sent to him with slices of bread with meat between, and in some way the name of the Earl was given to food served in just that way, and the name now is a fixture.

Of course we use a variety of mixtures for sandwiches—crackers, pastry, brown bread, and cake, but bread, as a rule, forms the principal part of a sandwich, and may have meat, fish, fowl, fruit, vegetables or sweet mixtures for filling—as the fancy or the occasion demands. Bread twenty-four hours old is the best to use, and if the butter is creamed, with a small wooden spoon, the thinnest slices may be spread without being broken, which is much better than to butter the end of the loaf and then cut the slice.

Sometime ago we spoke of wedding sandwiches, and illustrated them. They had no filling, simply fresh bread cut thin, buttered and rolled and tied with ribbon. In order to cut the slices of fresh bread thin enough to make a delicate sandwich, it is necessary to wrap the loaf as it is taken from the oven in a towel wrung out of cold water, and then cover with several thicknesses of dry cloth and let it stand three or four hours; then the slices can be cut quite thin and of course the crusts removed. A filling of the following recipe of chicken paste may be used, in addition to the butter if desired. One half cup each of white meat chicken and braised tongue, one half teaspoon celery salt, one teaspoon anchovy paste, four tablespoons mayonnaise dressing and a few grains cayenne. Chop the meat and pound to a paste; add seasonings and mix well. Omit anchovy paste if desired.

Some new dishes for serving berries and fruit have recently been designed, and are exceedingly dainty and comfortable to use. They are made in the shape of a leaf—grape or strawberry, usually, and have the stem extending two or three inches, to be used as a handle. Then the dish has a compartment for powdered sugar, which obviates the necessity of having sugar passed.

The beet is a universal favorite, and now when the beets are young and sweet they are particularly appetizing. They make a very attractive dish when stuffed and served cold, as shown in our illustration.

Select beets of uniform size and boil until tender. Set aside over night, covered with vinegar. When needed for serving, rub off the skin and take out the centre of each, leaving a cup. Arrange the cups on lettuce leaves, and for each five cups chop fine one cucumber, and pour over it a French dressing made of two tablespoons oil, one tablespoon vinegar, one-fourth teaspoon each of salt and paprica. Fill the cups with this mixture, and from the beet removed from centres of cups, cut fancy shaped pieces for decorating the top of each. Chopped celery or olives make a good filling, dressed in the same way, or a combination of celery and chopped radish.

HALIBUT SALAD.

Flake fish which has previously been boiled, and pour over it French dressing. Add half as much cold boiled potato cut in cubes, which has also been dressed with French dressing. Serve on lettuce. Cold cooked peas or string beans may be used in place of the potatoes, if desired.

SHRIMP SALAD.

Clean shrimps and cover with French dressing, and drain. Pare cucumbers and cut in halves lengthwise; remove seeds and steam until tender—chill and arrange on lettuce leaves or bed of watercress. Mix mayonnaise with the shrimp and place in the cucumbers, decorating with the mayonnaise put on with a pastry bag.

We have been requested to give a recipe for making pretzels, but have been unable to get the recipe, which we regret. If we are able to get one later, we will at once publish it in this column.

ALBERT MEMORIAL.

ONE of the richest monuments in the world is that in London which Queen Victoria erected to the memory of her husband.

Broad granite steps lead up on four sides to a platform. In the centre is a statue of gilded bronze fifteen feet in height portraying Prince Albert. On each of the four corners are four groups of statuary representing the four great divisions of the world, Europe, Asia, Africa and America, and from this also rises the tower in which is cut statues representing the greatest men of all ages.

Prince Albert was a devoted patron of art and science and the promoter of our first great world's exposition.

CURIOUS DWELLINGS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

IN the eastern shores of the Carpian Sea the Turcomans live. When this roving tribe of thieves sets out on a journey each man sets his wooden house on a camel's back and when they arrive at a place suitable for a settlement the house is removed from the camel and in a few hours the little village is complete.

This portable home is not a tent, but is made of light wood laths an inch broad and three-quarters of an inch thick crossing each other when set up in position at right angle, and fastened at the crossings by rawhide. So the whole framework can be open or shut.

This house frame is circular and measures about fifteen or twenty feet across. Over this is thrown a black felt covering with a hole at the top which answers as a chimney and a window. Around this is bound another frame of split reeds which are tied with strong cords making the whole structure secure. Sometimes these houses have two apartments divided by a screen, in which is barely more than a carpet for furnishings.

The Guiana Indian's house is a shed like arrangement and is nothing more than a roof in the warmest climates while in the cooler districts it is walled in accordingly. From the posts and rafters are hung the clubs, pans, paddles, guns, bows, etc., and between the upright posts in tiers one above the other are hammocks. This is called a warm house. And it is almost incredible how many will swing under a single roof. To the master of this place his hammock is his home.

In southern Africa, the women of the Makalolo tribe are the house builders. They begin by planting a circle of stakes this is wound with reeds and plastered with mud. So that it makes a wall nine or ten feet high. Then a large conical roof is made to set on top of this wall and this tower when completed is listed from the ground by a number of the natives together and set upon the wall. The projecting edges are supported by posts driven into the ground. This hatlike top is not fixed permanently to the wall and is removed when the weather is pleasant, or when they have visitors to accommodate this is placed where it makes a separate apartment for the company.

Probably the strangest house of all is that made in the skeleton of a whale. In Australia there are tribes who have been known to eat a whale's flesh and then reside in its remains which they cover with leaves and grass and matting to keep out winds and rain. Thus we see the habits of some of our own race are akin to animals and even insects.

TALKS WITH GIRLS.

CONDUCTED BY COUSIN MARION.

"The melancholy days have come the saddest of the year," or so the poet tells us, but there is no reason why we should be any sadder in September than we are in May, unless it is that we all have large families to keep warm, and coal is high. Let us be happy every month in the year, or try to, and the good Lord will surely reward us for making the world better. Now let us to our letters.

The first is from Cousin Huckleberry of Forest, Idaho, who wants to know what words to use in snubbing a young man. There are no set forms of words for this disagreeable duty. Circumstances and provocation must guide.

Tosy, Chicago, Ills.—See answer above to your first two questions. (3) Goodness knows what can be done with a sister who is disagreeable to her sisters' gentlemen callers. I know several of that kind. They are incurable—unless you marry them out the house.

Penn Rose, Towner, Pa.—Don't elope. Wait awhile and try to win your parents over. If they refuse finally, marry the man you love, if he is worthy. (2) Treat the young man that makes fun of you with silent contempt. (3) Home work at good wages is hard to find, and you can't get it from the firms you ask about.

Meta, Sidney, Iowa.—It is quite proper for a lady to send a valentine to a gentleman. (2 and 3) Ask your mother.

Primrose, Owensboro, Ky.—Drop the young man who prefers base ball on Sunday to his best girl. (2) Yes, three sisters may keep company in the same room, if the company is formal. (3) Certainly, old maids may go to parties. (4) By no means wear glasses simply for style. You'll ruin your eyes. (5) Do as you please about giving birthday presents. (6) The lady furnishes her own stamps, of course.

Rhoda, Effington, S. D.—The man who asks you to go to a dance and does not come after you and makes no explanation is not a gentleman, and you should drop him. He will probably lie to you if you call for an apology.

Millie, Beaver Harbor, Canada.—This is the nineteenth century simply because the twentieth century is not here yet, and won't be till 1901. Time began in the year 1, and each century begins the same.

Mayflower, Rockland, Mich.—Exercise, sunshine, good food and sleep. (2) It would be better not to go to dances yet. (3) Wear your hair down. (4) Don't have a beau.

Bessie, Pensacola, Fla.—The right kind of an engaged girl will not leave her affianced to go walking with another man, unless there is a perfect understanding why she does.

Pansy, Oak Ridge, La.—It is quite correct to divide dances when men are plenty. (2) Yes, a girl may visit her affianced's mother even if there are no girls in the house. (3) Better not accept two rings from the man of forty.

True-heart, Doylestown, Pa.—Stop writing to the young man you never met. If he is what you think he is he will call on you properly. You are foolish to think of loving a man you never saw. Possibly he is as black as the ace of spades.

Harryette, Ravenna, O.—Rings are often exchanged between those not engaged, but the practice is not a good one. (2) The man should not object to your accepting an escort when he is absent. (3) He should be there at the appointed hour, but you might wait a few minutes.

Rasters, Cleburne, Texas.—Yes, to all four of your questions.

Flirt, Dallas, Texas.—Will answer your questions five years from now.

Lena Houghton, La.—Girls of sixteen and under should not correspond with men.

Benderline, Pine Bluff, Ark.—Girls in school should not have beaus. (2) It is not correct for a "visitor to rest her hat."

White Rose, Reuben, Ala.—It is proper to shake hands when introduced. (2) A good way to bring the young man to a sense of his situation is to accept the attentions of some other young man. If he wants you he will let you know. (3) Write to any of the music firms advertising in COMFORT.

Effie, Bridgeton, N. Y.—Let the young man go out of your life. He evidently loves the other girl.

Pest, Lewistown, Mon.—The lady may suggest returning from the drive. (2) The boys are silly to "get mad" over the trick you played on them, and the best thing for them is to let them sulk and suck their thumbs. They'll be men after awhile.

Helene, San Francisco, Cal.—There is no free grammar class that I know of. (2) Write to M. D. Hurt, 1510 H street, N. W., Washington, D. C., about the other matter.

Flower Girl, Sable River, N. S.—The young man should not carry his hands in his pockets while walking with you. (2) In writing to a near friend address him informally, calling him by his first name if you know him well enough.

Sweet Pea, Elmdale, Kans.—Write to F. H. Snow, Ph.D., LL.D., Lawrence, Kans.

C. H. L., Brooklyn, Iowa.—The man with the lady takes off his hat when she speaks to any one whether he knows the person or not. (2) Yes.

B. F., Bellville, Texas.—There is no guaranteed cure for a bunion. Bunion shields, to be had at any druggist's, are good, but better is a shoe that will fit the foot right. There are such shoes made. Ask your shoe man.

H. E. H. L., Bristol, Me.—One young man may escort two or more ladies home from church or anywhere else. If the sidewalk is too narrow they must divide up to suit themselves. (2) Ask some of your friends to accompany you if the young man insists on walking with you. A policeman ought to be called for a young ruffian of that sort.

Ola, Vansycle, Ore.—Since you ask me many questions and agree to take my advice, I will answer them all by saying that you are too young to bother about such things as beaus and ought to study your books and all the ways to be good and useful when you are a woman.

Bud and Blossom, Sabula, Iowa.—Almost any kind of a game at parties is all right except a kissing game. They are common and vulgar.

Margaret, Post, Ore.—Nearly sixteen years old and don't know how to spell your name yet, and still you want to know about beaus. My, my, don't you think you had better study up on some other subject?

Pet, Nottoway, Va.—All your questions are answered in this column.

Violet, Augusta, Mo.—If the young man doesn't know enough to go home at the proper hour the girl ought to know enough to tell him to go.

Mary, Dwight, Mass.—Clean white silk ribbon with naphtha or gasoline, applying it with a cloth. If you put the material in the gasoline, press it out afterwards between cloths.

Tulip, La Grange, Ark.—Better see the doctor about the warts. The best thing for tan is lanoline, from any drug store, and lemon juice, say a teaspoonful of each, or half if you don't want so much. Apply before going to bed.

Lillian Evelyn, Johnson, Vt.—Lemon juice applied at night will remove freckles. (2) You are not old enough to wear your hair up, or to go wheeling with young men.

There, dears, all your questions are answered, and you have my best wishes until we meet again in October, and then too.

COUSIN MARION.

SOME FAMOUS HORSES.

ON the banks of the Boyne near the battlefield lies buried William III's favorite horse which was shot under him. After the battle William ordered a monument erected and his horse buried beneath it, with all the pomp of military ceremony.

"Copenhagen" the famous charger that carried the Duke of Wellington victorious at Waterloo died of old age in 1836 and was buried with honors. Over the horse's grave was erected an edifice worth about 2,000 pounds.

The most recent monument erected was in 1896 at Korea in memory of horses belonging to officers of the Japanese army.

CONDUCTED BY REGULUS.

THE new moon occurs on the 23rd of September, this year, about seven and a half hours after the sun has crossed the line, at the Autumnal Equinox. A figure of the heavens erected for that time at Washington, our seat of government, shows the 25th degree of the sign Capricorn rising and the 18th degree of Scorpio on the mid-heaven. The Sun and Moon come together in the 8th house or house of death, just past the evil rays of Saturn in the house of secret enemies, prisons, or places of confinement but in good aspect of Mars and Jupiter. Mars is just setting in the west and Jupiter is in his highest dignity in the 10th house with the Moon's ascending node. Saturn on the 12th cusp, he being ruler of the ascendant and significator of the people, indicates some species of harm to our people and officials in confinement, entailing some activity of naval forces and the military for protection of our citizens or to enforce demands of the government for indemnity for harm done to our people. Aside from these features of strife or contention the indications of the figure are remarkably good and mark the continuous onward march of our Nation among the great powers of the world.

The great financial questions of the country engage public attention and are treated with marked predominance of sentiment, doing honor to us as a people and promising to establish our Nation among the foremost of the world for integrity and credit and the justness of our dealings.

CELESTIAL CALENDAR FOR OCTOBER, 1900.

OCTOBER 1—Monday. Do not ask favors of public officers or persons in authority, nor expect much advantage from thy pursuit of any of the fine arts; otherwise the day is a good one for all general business or major commercial engagements.

2—Tuesday. Continue thine efforts of a business nature, but do not depend upon the day for mental labors of consequence or any of the literary engagements; have nothing to do with patents, copyrights, or trademarks.

3—Wednesday. Keep a check upon the temper and a too hasty tongue during the first two-thirds of this day, and with caution against impulsiveness and haste give every steady energy to the major undertakings in life; purchase goods for trade in the afternoon, when also seek money accommodations and deal with judicial officers, railway officials, government authorities and employees and all classes of organizations and corporate bodies.

4—Thursday. Make no contract concerning printing nor with persons engaged in buying or selling real estate or in building or excavating; give preference to the middle hours for the polite arts and social or musical engagements.

5—Friday. Begin this day with the dawn urging all pursuits concerning books or writings and dealing with all in the literary callings; let literary productions be launched, do important correspondence, travel and make contracts; the afternoon is less to be depended upon and caution should be had that money losses or needless expenditures do not come; do not seek aid of a financial character in the afternoon or evening, especially from public institutions or government authorities.

6—Saturday. Let commercial undertakings be diligently pushed on this day when also employ the mind in its most important connections; the time favors for dealing in silks, fancy goods, and all articles of adornment, dress, or decoration, for workers in wax, embroiderers, milliners, and dressmakers; deal in musical and dramatical goods and crowd all the major undertakings in life.

7—Sunday. The mind will be inclined toward the elegant in literature and the imagination will be unusually active; the day is peculiarly propitious for religious exercises; it is one of the best Sabbath days of the month.

8—Monday. Give attention after the morning hours to the pursuit of all the fine arts; the improvement of real estate, architecture, house furnishings, landscape painting and decoration of interiors; conditions favor such labors and engagements until noon of the 9th instant, with continually increasing energies.

9—Tuesday. Continue thine efforts urged for yesterday, during the forenoon; but look out for turmoil and controversies as the afternoon advances, when do not travel unnecessarily nor enter into any kind of contract; be watchful against thieves in the evening; keep the temper and postpone correspondence or mental efforts of magnitude; see that fires do not waste in business sections and be not involved in disputes.

10—Wednesday. The conditions on this day are not specially promotive of success in any of the great undertakings, though fair for routine labors.

11—Thursday. Trade sparingly and cautiously in fancy and ornamental goods; providing for absolute requirements only rather than purchasing in quantity; seek no audience with the ladies and beware of any matrimonial engagement at this time; the time is poor for the beginning of any dramatic engagements and music and the fine arts are somewhat "under the ban" for a few days, notably this afternoon and evening.

12—Friday. Begin early on this day and urge all mechanical pursuits; experiment in chemistry; deal with military men, druggists, bakers, tailors, barbers, carpenters, machinists and engineers, and seek advancements of or favor from military and police authorities, municipal governments and railway projectors.

13—Saturday. But little success need be expected in the enterprises begun during this forenoon, but as the noon is passed let every energy be given to the prosecution of business, notwithstanding the hours are the closing ones of the week. Persons born about the 29th of January, 30th of March, 4th of October or 2nd of December of past years, are peculiarly favored just at this time and if engaged in any of the manufacturing enterprises of life they experience benefits or developments of an unusually favorable character and should make beginnings of consequence in the directions indicated.

14—Sunday. The conditions promote happy efforts of the clergy, give flowery eloquence and unusual volubility of tongue; literary engagements and mental efforts are favored.

15—Monday. Make no application for favor or advantage from public officials or thy superior in business; have no dealings in fancy goods, apparel, or decorative wares and hold on to the purse-strings, but after midday bend every energy to the pursuit of business; urge correspondence, travel and plan thy financial undertakings.

16—Tuesday. Do not relax thine efforts of yesterday but be up and doing in every available moment of the day; open new stores, buy goods for trade, seek money accommodations from banks and persons of wealth; consult judges and officers of state and other public institutions, but put on the cautious cap in the evening, keeping out of all kinds of disputes and controversies; be watchful against fires and the evil inclinations of mankind as the night advances.

17—Wednesday. A fair day for most of the undertakings of life, though an exception is to be noted for the elegant and artistic pursuits which just now meet embarrassing experiences; let the fair sex avoid any matrimonial engagement at this time, especially if born about the 28th day of February, or the 1st of June, September, or December of past years; as they are likely to repent of such actions or suffer much unhappiness through the relations now assumed. Strange alliances are now made inviting censure or public comment and many persons engaged in the elegant pursuits meet embarrassment and hinderances of mischievous character.

18—Thursday. Bargain for houses and lands and push all business connected with building and repairing; deal with farmers, plumbers, shipwrights, mining officers, boot and shoe dealers and all the laboring classes.

19—Friday. This day is excellent for all general business though the literary pursuits are more favored in the latter hours; do important correspondence, execute deeds and writings, hire help, travel and seek dramatic and musical pleasures in the evening.

20—Saturday. An indifferent day generally until the late afternoon when strange and baffling disappointments are likely; seek not the society of the aged in the evening.

21—Sunday. An especially fortunate Sabbath day, inducing mental activity and promoting pulpit eloquence and the enjoyment of literary productions.

22—Monday. A good time for the beginning of undertakings concerned with machinery; deal with cutlers, surgeons, chemists, bakers, barbers, tailors, tanners, carpenters and military men; consult thy dentist and experiment in chemistry.

23—Tuesday. An excellent day. Give preference to the forenoon hours for engagements looking to the purchase, sale, or improvement of real estate; deal with miners, farmers, boot and shoe manufacturers, and persons concerned with the estates of deceased persons.

24—Wednesday. Give preference to the forenoon for the most important engagements pertaining to houses and lands. The afternoon is not so promising; it is also promotive of contention; be not over-sensitive to reproach or rash in word or act; avoid all litigation, and contain thyself in patience.

25—Thursday. Begin early and urge all manner of business to the utmost. This is the merchant's own day and especially fortunate for any honorable pursuit; buy goods for trade, especially by legitimate methods in business; travel, sign writings; urge literary and scientific pursuits and apply for favors for money accommodations. Artists, musicians, and all in the elegant occupations and polite arts are particularly favored and should take this time to begin their works of consequence.

26—Friday. Another of the best days of the month for beginning affairs of magnitude and importance. REGULUS advises his friends to take advantage of the bright and cheering conditions of this and the preceding day, to enter with zeal upon their several pursuits in life. If this be the anniversary of thy birthday then these suggestions apply with even greater force and thou mayst reckon with full assurance upon many very prosperous weeks to come; buy goods for trade, engage in new enterprises, speculate if thy nativity be fairly favorable; deal with public officials, judges, councillors, ecclesiastics and traders in wool and woolens. The time is particularly favorable for persons born about the 30th of January, 31st of March, 3rd of August, or 3rd of October, and such persons have in these passing weeks marked increase of friends, improved health or unexpected and more favorable business advantages and benefits.

27—Saturday. Improve the forenoon for the mechanical pursuits and the transactions of business with dealers in hardware, cutlery, metals, glasswares, brass and iron work and chemical and electrical apparatus, and experiment in chemistry or with machinery; the afternoon is less favorable.

28—Sunday. Not particularly promising for a Sabbath day, inviting rest and quiet rather than physical exertion or mental effort.

29—Monday. A day not especially conducive to progress in any direction, though it is by no means unfavorable for the routine transactions of life.

30—Tuesday. Give preference to the afternoon for the principal undertakings of life; the literary pursuits are especially favored and commercial contracts and engagements concerned with the production of books, magazines, and public writings should be here made.

31—Wednesday. This day should be fully employed for dealings with dentists, chemists, surgeons, soldiers, builders, mechanics generally, and all workers in brass, iron and glass; do not use the time for soliciting any favor from thine employer or persons in authority.

How To Cure
RUPTURE

DEAR READER:—It gives me much pleasure and satisfaction to write this little story, for it contains a new and wonderful method of curing rupture or hernia, and places before the afflicted words of hope and tidings of great joy.

It is not my intention to use medical words or terms for the purpose of confusing those who are not familiar with them. I am sure this would not be more valuable for using those technical terms which some use, for the sole purpose of making some ignorant one believe they possess extraordinary knowledge

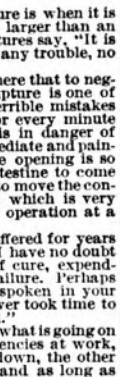
I am not going to describe the many ways one may become ruptured. In the many years I have treated ruptures I have been told of more than a thousand different things that caused my patients' affliction. That you are ruptured, and that I can cure you, is the purpose for which this is written, and it will surely be a blessing, coming unawares to those who follow its teachings.

There are several kinds of rupture and they are named according to their location, the most common being Scrotal, Umbilical (navel) and Femoral. They are again divided into two classes as reducible or irreducible. The reducible is one that can be returned to its proper place within the abdomen. The irreducible is one that cannot be returned. The last named is caused by going without a truss, but mostly by using some poor and ill-constructed one.

RUPTURED.

There are many people who are ruptured and don't know it. They will have at times a slight pain in the lower part of the abdomen. If they do much lifting or straining work it grows worse and will at times get so bad they think they have an attack of colic. They will take some medicine for colic, lie down, and in many cases the pain will disappear, because whatever was out returns to its natural position. But in other cases the surgeon has to be called because the rupture has become strangulated. In some cases he succeeds in reducing it, in others a surgical operation is necessary, and with others after hours of agony death only gives relief.

The best time to attend to a rupture is when it is small, perhaps in some cases no larger than an acorn. Many who have small ruptures say, "It is only a small one, does not give me any trouble, no need to bother about that."



SMALL RUPTURE DANGEROUS Let me say right here that to neglect the small rupture is one of the most terrible mistakes possible, for every minute life is in danger of immediate and painful death by strangulation, for the opening is so small that it only allows one intestine to come down. It then requires great force or pressure to move the contents and in many cases it becomes constricted which is very apt to prove fatal or require a painful surgical operation at a great cost of time and money.

HAVE YOU Perhaps you have suffered for years with rupture. If so, I have no doubt but you have tried many trusses and methods of cure, expended many dollars and always the same result—failure. Perhaps you have been told by some one or it has been spoken in your presence and you believed it because you never took time to think about it, that "rupture could not be cured."

IT CAN BE CURED Just think a minute of what is going on in your body. Two agencies at work, one constantly tearing you down, the other building you up or repairing, and as long as your vitality is good the repairing force keeps you in perfect health. Suppose you broke your arm, never had it set, or the proper appliance used to make it reunite and heal, the result would be that you would always have a broken arm. But you do have the proper attendance and care, and your arm in a short time is well again. So your rupture will heal if given the same chance—viz.: retain everything in a natural position the same as if there was no rupture and nature will do the rest. But the facts are:—you became ruptured, experienced very little or no pain, and you put off from day to day using the correct appliance needed to assist nature in its work. You needed a truss that would hold under every condition the strain from the injured part until it was healed, and strong enough to perform its work again. You need an appliance that HOLDS AND HEALS WHILE YOU WORK.

HOW COULD THIS HEAL The trusses that have been placed on afflicted ones in the past were constructed on the wrong principle and are now things of the past. In their day some were considered good and in some cases gave partial relief. They would hold one day and perhaps the next day would let the hernia out many times. In fact never two days alike because they were not self-adjusting. Some thought when the elasitc was introduced, "here is a perfect truss at last," but they soon found out their mistake. They place all dependence on elastic webbing or belts which go around the body and they must be pulled or buckled tight enough so they are a torture, to bring the pads in position to bear on the rupture. Everyone knows that the sweat of the body will soon rot the elastic in the webbing, and as they must be continually stretching and giving out; never two days alike; consequently the intestines are being let out of their natural position, and never give the rupture a chance to heal. How can that kind of a truss cure a rupture? A rupture to be cured must be held securely in its natural position. It is probably a waste of time to tell you about old style trusses. You know it all. You know how you have suffered in warm weather from sweating and chafing. The belts and straps pulled up so tight over the galled parts that you would think, "I would rather die than suffer this any longer," and many, after repeated trials, unable to bear the torture any longer, are risking their lives and living in misery without a truss.

HOW TO CURE To effect a cure of hernia, all know that the hernial tumor or intestines must be held in an easy, comfortable and natural position, in fact to be in the same natural position that they would be in if there was no rupture. It has been my great fortune to have placed in my possession a new idea in the shape of what I may call a truss. Do not think it is one of those instruments of torture you have seen that has ropes, pulleys, elastics, etc. To compare mine with others would be like comparing the electric light with an old fashioned lamp. My appliance or truss stands out alone as a new idea, something far ahead of anything ever before placed upon a human being. A wonderful invention, holds with comfort everything in its proper, natural position, giving nature the chance to heal she has been waiting for. IT IS AS EASY TO WEAR AS A STOCKING, safe, simple, cleanly and durable.

CURED.

WILL LAST 100 YEARS IF NEEDED Cool and comfortable in warm weather, has no parts to chafe, does not absorb the foul odors of the body, always in place, always comfortable, always healing. It has no elastic webbing, no straps between the legs and no spring around the body. No matter what your position is, it never need changing.

YOU WORK WHILE IT HEALS No loss of time. Our appliance stands out alone, a new idea, PATENTED BY THE U.S. GOVERNMENT, and has been proven to be far in advance of any other appliance for the cure of rupture.

DOES IT DO THIS Does your truss hold you at all times? Is it comfortable, giving you a feeling of safety that you are all right? Is your rupture week by week growing smaller? If not, throw away that truss. Don't lose your health, perhaps your life, with such a contrivance. It is wrong in principle, wrong in construction, and may do a positive injury. In many cases the trusses are made and sold by persons who never saw a rupture. Belts, elastics, springs, and in fact everything that could be made, that some kind of a pad was fastened to, was put on to sufferers as a truss.

WHAT YOU WANT Is an appliance that holds everything in its natural position, SAFE, SURE, CLEANLY, HEALING, COMFORTABLE. So easy that you do not realize you are ruptured. You ask, "Is there such an appliance?" The answer is, "Yes! for I HAVE THAT APPLIANCE!" The inventor of this wonderful truss, the Rev. Jeremiah Hayden, who was chaplain of the 17th Maine Regiment, says:

THE PASTOR'S STORY "Finding myself ruptured, I sought advice of an elder brother who had the same trouble. He said, 'I have been ruptured for forty years, and have spent over $300 for trusses, and the one I have on now is the best one I ever had. It cost me $15 (it was an elastic truss) but it is breaking and I must get another.' On examination I found an elastic strap around him with every stitch of the webbing printed on his body, while the understrap that passed between his legs had chafed him so that he was red and sore. This led me to discover my truss, which is as EASY TO WEAR AS A STOCKING, and which ended all pain, danger and cost, and never needs repairing. I want to get it into the hands of my fellow-men who are suffering from this dangerous and painful infirmity, for I know it will be worth a hundred times its cost. I am broken down with kidney and heart disease, and I am in constant expectation of death. (82 years old.) The thought has been constantly before me: an invention which has the power to relieve so much suffering should not be buried with me. As I am not able, I want you to take measures to introduce it to the world, and if this is accomplished, I shall feel that my life has been of value to sufferers. As I have reflected upon the miseries of millions without means of relief, and the dismal certainty of their growing worse, and considered that I have in my keeping a comfortable, sure fitting, never failing remedy, amply proven and tested in my own and other cases, and which, at a glance, common sense will appreciate, I feel that it would be a giant wrong to mankind to have this invention buried with me, for AS I VALUE MY HONOR IN THIS WORLD AND MY SOUL IN THE NEXT, I unhesitatingly declare that a failure in any instance is impossible." A truly most wonderful invention; a blessing to mankind. An article that will cure, because it will hold everything just right, in its natural position, which gives the rupture a chance to re-unite and heal.

CAN YOU DOUBT What more need be said than the minister's statement printed above? Does any one believe for a moment that Mr. Hayden would make a statement he did not believe true? Will you be benefited by my method? It costs so little and success is certain. Why will you drag out a miserable existence when the means of relief are at your command?

TERMS: NO CURE, NO PAY It is the perfect confidence I have in my method of cure that warrants me in adopting the above terms. Surely I have great faith in my way of treating rupture or I would never make the following proposition to you. It is a fair, honest offer that no other firm dare make, because they have not the goods to back it up. You will carefully fill up the Measure Blank with the answers to the questions asked thereon. We also ask you to sign our Special Order Blank. You will please send us those two blanks and the small sum stated on the Special Order Blank with your order. The reason I ask you to send this guarantee with the order is, there are so many people who are always writing for anything they can get for nothing. Many would write who are not ruptured. They know some one who is, and they want to get for nothing something they can sell the afflicted party for $10 or $15. There are others who have no gratitude in them; their object seems to be to get all they can for nothing and in no way ever think of repaying a favor or paying what rightfully belongs for them to pay. THIS I KNOW FROM ACTUAL EXPERIENCE. To keep such parties from troubling me, I have decided on the following plan: You are to send the two blanks before mentioned and the small amount stated thereon, the same to be held by us as a small guarantee of good faith. Upon receipt of same we at once send you by mail, all charges paid and safe delivery guaranteed, a truss, the same to be used by you. When cured you are to promptly send us $4.00 more and return our truss, which we only lend you. Many who get cured say they want to keep the truss. To all I will say that I will sell it at a fair price and charge according to the work done, and it will not be over $10. The terms I have offered are fair and liberal, no fair-minded person can say they are not, and I will not under any circumstances deviate from them.

Will you, after these plain and truthful statements, continue to suffer and risk your life by wearing an old style, imperfect truss? Dare you go without one knowing you are daily growing worse, and that within a short time you will become a total wreck? Dare you lay this aside before you give it a trial, which costs you nothing if you are not satisfied? Do you think it is a humbug? If we were frauds we would not ask such a small sum with the order; we would ask $5.00 or $10.00. A fraud never expects a second order, so they get all the first.

We can fit an infant, or a man or woman weighing 300 lbs. Fleshy ladies having navel ruptures will find it a great blessing. No hot bands around you. It is the only truss that can be worn by women and be clean and comfortable. Ruptured women who are pregnant can wear it and avoid many hours and days of misery. Don't put off ordering it. Do it today; tomorrow may be too late. What more need be said to convince you? We warrant A PERFECT FIT IN EVERY CASE.

SEE THE TESTIMONIALS Be sure to fill out the two blanks. The truss fits all kinds of ruptures. In closing will say I have cured many who have had bad ruptures and can cure you if you will only let me. I can be the means of doing you much good, and hope to hear from you in the near future. If you wish the names of people in your own state who endorse our method, send postage and we will send you their names.

MY GUARANTEE The perfect confidence I have in my truss, and the knowledge I have from actual experience of its curing properties enables me to guarantee every truss. Your rupture may be small, or it may be one that only at times gives you little pain or trouble. Did you ever know a rupture that did not from month to month grow worse? Let me say right here that there is nothing so dangerous as a rupture. Nothing keeps a man or woman so near death, nothing causes so much trouble or the cause of so many surgical operations. The ways of Providence are wonderful. This advertisement may be one of its methods of warning, coming to you unawares, which if neglected means your death. Don't be deceived or have your mind changed by some one who has trusses for sale or who gets a commission by getting a truss for you. They will lose the money, so they will say, "Don't send for the Surehold Truss; it is so cheap it can't be good," and then they will offer to sell you something costing $5.00 and upwards, and say, "This is good because we ask a big price for it." The fact is they make so few sales that when they do find a customer they charge enough to keep themselves going until they get another victim to fleece. Just say to such people that the Surehold Truss is not sold, it is only loaned, and just as soon as you are cured I get the truss back and $4.00 more. I have thousands of patients, so it pays me. Ask others to let you have their goods on the same terms as I do, and I will warrant you will get some flimsy excuse.

A MAN CURED WHILE HE WORKED. DEAR SIR: I cannot find words to express my thanks. I tried many kinds and never one that would hold me. The Surehold holds me in all places and at all kinds of work, and I have never lost a day's time. I am cured entirely and have not had to wear a truss for many weeks. I have worked hard shoveling and wheeling coal; traveling up and down stairs at my work as watchman. Some nights I have put in more than a ton of coal. G. S. HOSLEY, Norwood, Mass. Granite St.

A WOMAN CURED AFTER 18 YEARS OF SUFFERING, AGE 61. DEAR SIR: I cannot say enough in favor of your truss. Please accept my most sincere thanks for the benefit I have received. I have not worn a truss for three months now. I had previously worn a truss day and night for over 18 years. I have worked hard all the fall drying fruit and doing the duties of the household. I heartily wish that every man, woman or child who has suffered as I did would be convinced that your truss will cure rupture. I wish you long life and prosperity and an eternal life in the future. Yours truly, MARTHA DAVIS, Diamond, Ark.

A BOY CURED MY BOY. SIR: Your truss has cured my boy when no other would, in the time you said it would. I am more than thankful to you. Every word you said was true. No need of any child suffering when they can be cured so easily.
MRS. MARY YARNELL, Middleton, Ohio.

HA! HA! HA! FUN ALIVE!

The Comical Mirror.

A handsome convex mirror in a case suitable for carrying in the pocket. For many years the funniest and most laughable attraction in nearly every museum has been the large convex mirrors in which a person appears drawn out as long and narrow as a bean pole, or flattened down like a gridiron with a face as broad as a cellar door. This mirror produces the same effect as the large and expensive mirrors in the museums. By holding the mirror in an upright position stout people look thin and in a horizontal position thin people look stout; anyone can recognize themselves at once, but their features are so distorted and their general appearance so changed that they cannot fail to have a good laugh over it. If you have a friend (lady or gentleman) who think they are a little better looking than anyone else, let them take a peep into the mirror and it will take them down a peg or two—either the "short and fat" view or the "long and slim" view are stunners and will cure the blues every time. Send for one it will afford you lots of fun.

GRAND OFFER TO YOU. It is one of the very best watches for time ever offered to our readers at no matter what the price asked for it. We know, of course, there are watches that cost more money, because they are in gold or silver cases, but they will not keep any better time, simply because they cannot. This watch keeps not perfect time, we never saw the watch that did, but it keeps as near perfect time as watches usually do. We have such faith in this watch as a timekeeper that we send with every one a guarantee just as binding as that given with any watch, no matter what make. We are willing to give you this watch if you will do us a slight service, which you can easily do in an hour. We wish to increase our subscription list, and we want the assistance of every reader of this paper to that end. We do not want you to do it for nothing, we will reward you for it. You can easily secure this valuable watch if you get four subscribers to this paper, at our special subscription price of 25 cents a year each. NOTICE TO AGENTS.

A Profitable Business

WILLING TO WORK.

$3.00 a Day Sure.

DEAR READER:

If you are out of work, or are not satisfied with your present business and would like to make more money, it will be to your interest to read this notice. We do not offer you a chance to make a fortune without work, but we do offer you an opportunity to make money much faster than you can make it at any other kind of work. The country is flooded with circulars offering chances to make money at the rate of from twenty to fifty dollars a day; such offers are not business-like, and all agents who amount to anything are disgusted with such circulars, and most of them are thrown aside without being read. If you are looking for an opportunity to make twenty to fifty dollars a day, you might as well throw this notice aside also; but if you would like to engage in a good paying business, you will do well to read this notice through carefully. Then you can use your own judgment as to whether our offer is a reasonable one or not.

We guarantee that anyone who is willing to work can make from $3 to $5 a day at this business. We admit that $3 to $5 a day is not much of an inducement when compared to the statements made by some firms, who offer all the way from $20 to $50 a day for selling various articles. We do not make you such glowing promises, but what we do offer you has the advantage of being true. We might offer agents a sure chance of making from $20 to $50 a day, but the chances are that anyone who would believe such unreasonable nonsense would not know enough to earn his board at any kind of business. That is not the kind of agents we are in quest of; we want reliable agents with common sense, who are willing to work for good pay, and not those who are looking for an opportunity to make a fortune without work. We believe the only way to get such agents and keep them, is to furnish them with a good thing to sell, a real genuine bargain, and then to tell them the exact truth about the business. We have a large number of agents at work, and we know for a certainty what working agents can make. We know that $3 a day is the very lowest; most of our agents are averaging $4 and $5 a day, and often some of them make a good deal more than that. We have several agents who are clearing from $7 to $10 a day. But these are great workers operating in the best territory, and, of course, everyone cannot do as well, but it is easy for anyone to make, at the very least, $3 a day above all expenses in any territory. We haven't a single working agent who is clearing, on an average, less than $3 a day. Now, be sure that you understand us: We don't say that lazy, shiftless agents will make $3 a day, for they can't do it at this or any other business, but what we do say is that agent who are willing to work, not too hard, but the same as they would expect to work at any other business, can easily clear $3 a day above all expenses, in any territory, and if they have good territory to work in they can make anywhere from $5 to $7, and even $10 a day. If you want a good chance to work and get good pay for it, you will find it to your interest to read this notice through carefully.

The articles which we have for you to sell are a line of forks, spoons, etc., made of a new metal called "Brazil Silver." We will describe this new line of goods the best we can, then you can judge for yourself whether we are offering you a good chance to make money or not.

BRAZIL SILVER.

Warranted for Twenty-five Years.

Brazil Silver is believed to be the very best metal in existence for the manufacture of forks and spoons; it has all the lustre and brilliancy of burnished coin silver, and is much harder and more durable, in fact, it is impossible to wear it out. It is absolutely indestructible. The goods made of this metal are the same all the way through, there being no plating to wear off they will remain as good as new for any length of time. For all practical purposes in the manufacture of table ware this Brazil Silver is superior to coin silver. It is as lustrous and as pure as coin silver, and being much harder it will wear even longer than silver; in fact it is absolutely impossible to wear it out. It will wear forever. As there is no plating to wear off, the metal being the same all the way through, it stands to reason that you can't wear it out. Our confidence in the metal is so great that we guarantee it to wear twenty-five years. We give a guarantee signed by the company warranting the goods to wear and to give perfect satisfaction for twenty-five years. We are an old, strong and thoroughly established firm with ample capital to carry on our business and make our guaranty as good as the Bank of England. In selling these goods an agent can recommend them with the greatest of confidence, for they are just as represented, absolutely indestructible. And, furthermore, our guarantee warranting the goods to give satisfaction for twenty-five years, clears the agent from all responsibility in the matter; for if any article fails to give perfect satisfaction, no matter how long it has been in use, we hold ourselves ready to refund the money paid for the article. These goods are the same metal all the way through; they will never wear out. They always wear white and bright. We give a guarantee signed by the company, warranting every piece of Brazil Silver to wear twenty-five years. You can sell these goods to your best friends with perfect confidence, for every sale is as much a benefit to your customer as to yourself.

Working with goods that are warranted to wear and give satisfaction for so long a time as twenty-five years, and by a Company, too, whose capital is sufficiently large to make their guarantee good for almost any amount, is an advantage which no other firm is prepared to offer. If you want to make money fast now is the time to do it. If you think that five-dollar bills are good things to have, now is the time to get them. Never in the history of the agency business have agents had as good a chance to make money rapidly, and it is reasonably sure that they will never have another chance like it.

It is easy to make from $3 to $5 a day at this business.

All Marked with Initial Letters, Without any Extra Cost.

Among all classes there has always been a strong desire to have their table ware marked with their initial letter, but on account of the heavy expense of having it marked only a very few have been able to afford it. Heretofore the cost of artistically marking table ware has been even greater than the cost of the goods; now, by our new methods, we are able to offer these elegant Brazil Silver goods, all marked with any initial letter desired in the very highest style of the art, without any extra cost for marking. These Brazil Silver goods, even if unmarked, would be the greatest bargain ever offered the public in table ware, but with the additional and highly desirable feature of being all marked with beautiful and artistic initial letters, these goods are not only great bargains in table ware, but are the greatest bargains of any kind that have ever been offered to the public through agents or in any other way.

The people are always ready enough to buy what they want when it is presented to them in the form of a genuine bargain. Well, here is absolutely the greatest bargain every offered, and the agent who works with it will find that what he has is earnestly desired at nearly every house he visits; it is easy to get orders when you can offer great bargains, that the people really want and can afford.

It is easy to make from $3 to $5 a day at this business.

Table and Dessert Knives.

Our knives are made of the finest tempered cutlery steel and are triple plate, in other words every dozen knives is plated with 12 dwt. of pure silver and hand burnished. Our knives are of the highest grade, fully equal to Rogers' or any knives made. These knives will not wear as long as Brazil Silver goods, but they will wear as long as any knives made. We guarantee them to wear ten years in constant use. If not in constant use they will wear proportionately longer. We give a guarantee, signed by the Company, warranting the knives to wear and to give perfect satisfaction to the purchaser for ten years. As knives are usually used in families they will wear much longer, anywhere from fifteen to twenty years. They are fully equal to Rogers' knives and only cost about two-thirds as much. It may seem strange to some that we can sell so staple an article as silver plated knives at such reduced prices, but we are doing it. It is our way of giving the public good, solid value for their money. We are saving our customers about one-third of the price at which the same grade of knives are sold at the stores and jewelers. Any one who will take the trouble to compare our knives and prices with triple plate 12 dwt. knives sold at the stores and jewelers, will be convinced of the truth of our statements. We are making a profit, of course, but our unequal facilities and immense trade make it possible for us to undersell all competitors, and our customers are getting the benefit of the lowest prices known in the silverware trade. We are not only selling at greatly reduced prices, but we also guarantee every article to be exactly as represented and to give perfect satisfaction to the purchaser, or money refunded.

The First Thing to Do.

If you decide to accept the agency, the first thing to do is to send to us for the agent's case of samples, which is the most complete and perfect case of samples that has ever been prepared for the convenience of agents. Our complete and perfect case of samples is not to be compared with anything that has ever been sent to agents before. It contains the very best and most salable articles in the world. There is nothing in the market that agents can sell as fast and sell as easily and make as much money out of, as they can the goods contained in this splendid case of samples, and everything is arranged and explained so that any agent can't fail to understand just how to go to work to make a great success of the business. As soon as you receive the case of samples you are ready for business. And if you are willing to work you are just as sure to make from $3 to $5 a day as the sun is to rise. Take the case of samples and canvass your territory according to the directions sent with the samples, until you have taken orders for the amount of goods you are prepared to send for. Then order the goods from us and fill your orders, and so continue.

The Magnificent Case of Samples Which We Furnish to Agents.

The case of samples which we furnish to agents contains the following articles:

We also send you with the case of samples a large and very beautiful catalogue, illustrating a full line of plated ware, such as Casters, Pickle Cruets, Butter Dishes, Tea Sets, Napkin Rings, etc., etc., etc.

Reckoning the above samples at our lowest retail prices they amount to $2.83 1-3. We furnish them to agents nicely put up in an elegant sample case or roll, for only $1.00, which is $1.83 1-3 less than they amount to at our regular retail prices. This is less than one-half of the retail value of the samples, and much less than they cost us. The sample case or roll, which the samples are put up in costs us nearly as much as we require you to send for the samples, case and all.

Wholesale Prices.

Wholesale or agents' prices and all necessary information for carrying on the business will be furnished with the Outfit. Remember we make everything plain to you about wholesale prices, methods, etc., when we send you the Outfit.

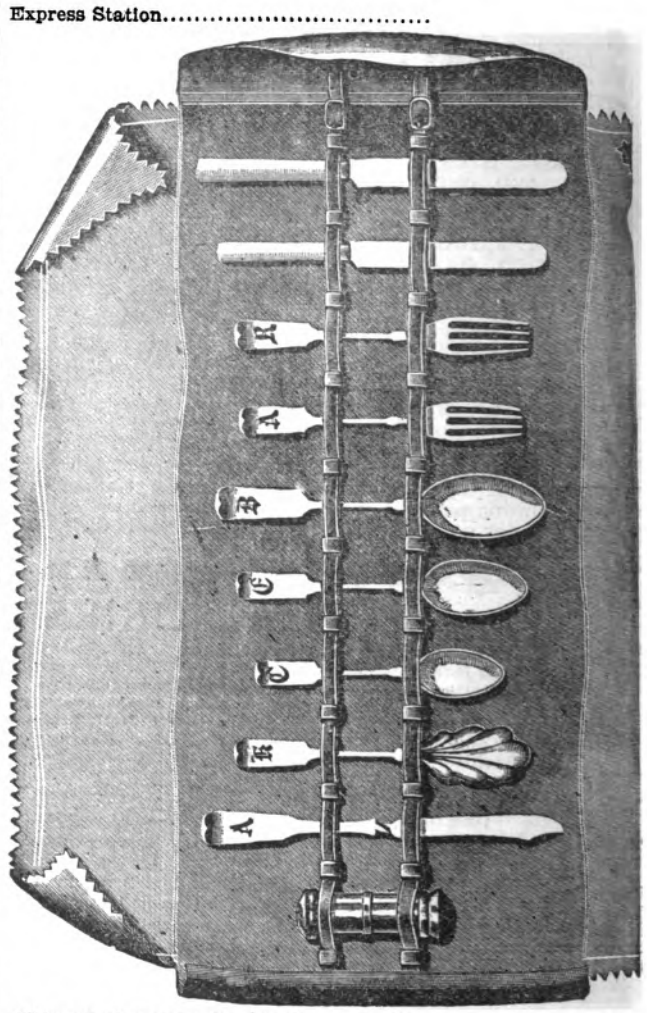
VERY IMPORTANT.

The business we are offering is straightforward and honest in everyway, shape and manner. Our goods are in every respect, just as we represent them to be. The Outfit we furnish our agents is exactly as we represent it, and is always sent the same day the order is received, just as agreed. We have tried to state these facts so they could and would be believed and still we are constantly receiving letters from parties who would like to engage in the business and would do so if they felt sure we were telling the truth and would do as we agree. Many of these doubters have been cheated and are not altogether to blame for doubting; the most of them say they think we are honest, they say we talk honest, but as they have already been swindled they don't feel like risking even one dollar and so, although our business is in every respect just as represented, and we always do just as we promise, we lose the services of a great many agents and they lose the benefit they might derive from the business because they are afraid we may not be telling the truth. Now, to overcome this spirit of doubt, we have decided to send Samples to all who wish us to do so, C. O. D., with privilege of examination at the express office. It costs us from twenty-five to forty cents more to send the samples this way, as we have to pay that amount for return charges on the money, but we are willing to do it and so prove to all that are interested that the Outfit and our goods are just what we claim. If after reading this notice you think you would like to give the business a trial, but wish to see the Sample Case before you pay the one dollar cut out the following printed form, fill it out and send it to us and we will send the Outfit to your express office prepaid, and give the express agent instructions to let you thoroughly examine the Outfit, then, if you are satisfied that we have told the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and are also satisfied that you can make money selling our goods, you can pay the express agent one dollar and take the Outfit. If you are not satisfied, you can refuse to take it and the agent will return it to us. No other firm has ever made such an offer. We have adopted this plan in order to convince the most skeptical and to secure the services of all the good working agents in the United States.

(CUT OUT THE FOLLOWING FORM.)

Form to be Signed by those who wish us to send the Outfit C. O. D. with Privilege of Examination.

ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., DETROIT, MICH.:



GENTLEMEN—Send the Outfit by Express, C. O. D., with privilege of examination. If I find the Outfit just as you say, I will pay the one dollar required and give the business a fair trial, but if I am not satisfied that the Outfit is as good as you recommend it to be, I shall refuse to receive it. Now, remember, the understanding is that I am not to take the Outfit unless I, myself, am satisfied that it is all right. It must all depend on my own judgment. If I am satisfied, I will take the Outfit; if I am not satisfied, I shall not take it and shall not pay the one dollar If you want to send the Outfit with this understanding, send it along C. O. D., with privilege of examination.

This cut shows the Sample Case or Roll, and how the samples appear put up ready for business. The Roll is made of highly finished waterproof canvas, and lined with soft flannel goods. The samples are held in place by strong straps. The whole rolls up and fastens with a leather strap which is firmly fastened to the back of the Roll. This is the most practical arrangement for carrying the samples that could be thought of. When rolled up the Case is compact and easy to carry. When open the samples show to the best possible advantage, making a good impression at first sight. This Sample Roll gives a business-like appearance; it is substantial and handsome, and invariably gives the impression that there is something valuable inside. All are anxious to see what it is you are carrying around with such care. This is of importance as it secures attention and interest at the start. There is nothing like having your samples put up in a business-like shape; it gives a favorable impression from the start, which is half the battle. It is the same in all matters. A store that looks like business attracts customers; while, from a shanty store, you would not, as a rule, expect the best things. The fact is, in the agency business, as in every other business, you must have things fixed up just right if you expect to succeed. Our Brazil Silver Goods are the best that have ever been offered for the price, or anywhere near it. The new feature of being marked with beautiful and artistic initial letters, free of cost, is the greatest popular hit of the times; and the Sample Roll is arranged so as to show the goods off to the best possible advantage. Furthermore, we carefully teach every agent just how to take advantage of all these splendid qualities and popular features. Is it any wonder that our agents succeed better than those who are working for other firms?

We Prepay all Express Charges on Everything. We pay the charges on the Outfit and on all goods ordered. Remember, we pay all express charges.

THE MAN OF SIERRA ABAJO.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY MARK STRONGHOLD.

Copyright, 1900, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

THE official census credits San Juan county with three hundred souls. If this is not an error, there must be a plurality of souls to every inhabitant. The latter contingent is possibly the true explanation of the situation; for this great, triangular expanse of barren country lies within the borders of Utah and Mormonism.

No effort has been made to enumerate prairie-dogs, coyotes, rattle-snakes and scorpions; but they are there, and nowhere more plentiful than in the thirty miles of sun, sand and giant cactus which stretch from Cataract Canon on the Colorado to the ragged peaks of Sierra Abajo.

Elder Ophir's opinion of this particular portion of his native state was more forceful than elegant.

"And may Heaven pardon a sinful man for saying what he thinks," he concluded, much to the amusement of his companion.

The Elder applied spurs to the ribs of his winded horse, and the man riding at his side fell to using a raw-hide quirt.

"Another mile of this, Hamblin," gasped the Elder, "and we'll both be dead."

"We'll have company," and he pointed to a small speck out over the quivering sand.

As the riders slowly drew together, the Elder strained his eyes to make out what manner of man approached.

"Bless me," he cried, "the man's riding a white burro. And look at that white robe he's wrapped in."

The stranger rode with his chin resting upon his breast, and a huge sombrero pulled down over his face. He came abreast of the Elder and his companion, and passed them without a word.

"Well, that's cool," laughed Hamblin. "Hi there! who are you?"

The white burro came to a full stop. The stranger lifted the sombrero from his head, and slowly turned round in the saddle. His long, curling hair and forked beard were of a dull copper hue, and his face was a chalky white. Fixing his deep-set eyes upon Hamblin, he answered:

"Some say that I am God, and others, a prophet. I am neither. I am a man even as yourself."

"Where are you from, and where are you going?" questioned Elder Ophir.

"I am from Sierra Abajo," the man responded, "and I am going into all the world to turn sinners to repentance."

"Blasphemy!" muttered the Elder.

"His hands—look at his hands!" exclaimed Hamblin, excitedly. "He's manacled."

"An escaped lunatic," said the Elder.

"Think you that I do this save of my own will?" the man answered; and lifting up his hands, he burst the chains apart.

"Filed!" the Elder gasped weakly.

At that moment Hamblin reeled and fell from his horse. In an instant the strange man was at his side.

"Get out of the way," the Elder said, dismounting and producing a flask of whiskey. "None of your mummery here."

"But that is contrary to your law," said the man, pointing to the liquor.

"What do you know about the law of Mormon?" demanded the Elder, as he forced some of the fiery liquid down the throat of his unconscious friend.

"Woe unto them that follow after strange doctrines! Woe unto——"

Springing to his feet, white with rage, Elder Ophir struck the stranger a fierce blow in the face.

"Woe unto them that despitefully use you!"

The man was turning away when his eyes rested once more upon the prostrate form of Hamblin. Bending down he gently drew his hand across the rigid, upturned face.

"They weren't filed, I tell you," shouted Hamblin, springing to his feet. "Say! what's the matter?"

"You fell off your horse," replied the Elder, in a trembling voice. "Get into your saddle, if you can, and let's get away from this place!"

Meanwhile, the stranger had mounted his burro, and was riding away.

"Ophir," began Hamblin, solemnly, "I have a presentiment that this man will be the cause of your death."

Without replying, the Elder drew a revolver from the holster at his side, and springing into the saddle, made after the departing stranger. When within range he opened fire, and the white-robed figure pitched forward on the neck of his burro.

"How about that presentiment of yours?" the Elder asked, as he rode back with the smoking revolver still in his hand. "What's the matter, are you going to faint again?"

"Don't come near me," Hamblin sobbed with chattering teeth. "Don't touch me. Murderer! Throw it off, man—the rope—they are hanging you—help, help!"

"The accursed sun has turned his head," growled the Elder, glancing furtively over his shoulder. "What's one dead man more or less?"

* * * * * *

The railroad ran as far as Espanola and stopped, apparently exhausted. Ophir swore. He would have gone on forever. However, there was the river; he might be able to float out of the country. The railroad agent laughed when approached on the subject of a boat.

"This Rio Grande Del Norte is something of a river when it wakes up," he told Ophir; "but just now it wouldn't float a dead cactus stock."

Ophir pointed to where two burros were rolling in the hot dust.

"Is that the only way out of it?" he asked.

"That or afoot," replied the agent cheerfully.

"I can't do it," mused Ophir. "Nothing could be worse than a trip through that blazing hell."

"What's the trouble?" queried the agent. "Somebody campin' on your trail?"

Ophir started guiltily and a look of terror overspread his face.

"That's nothin'," the agent assured him. "You're not the only man in New Mexico that's wanted. I've taken care of a good many—when they were willing to pay for it."

Elder Ophir pondered over the situation until the agent closed up the little station-house and started home for the night.

"Better come along," the agent said.

"Are you alone?" Ophir asked.

"Yes—that is, no one there but my daughter."

For a few days following, Ophir experienced something like contentment. The hunted look left his face, and he was beginning to congratulate himself upon his successful escape. Then Marcia, the agent's daughter, came to him with tears and words of warning. A little later she handed him a crumpled telegram.

"Father's telegraphed them that you are here," said the girl. "We'll have to go tonight."

"We?"

"Yes, I'm goin' with you," she said. "You couldn't ever get away by yourself."

Ophir objected, but Marcia was obdurate. That night they crossed the Rio Grande, traversed on foot a mile of sandy plain, and finally took refuge in the old church of Santa Cruz.

A brother of the Order of Penitentes rose from his devotions as the fugitives entered.

"God be with you," he said faintly. "What do you seek?"

"Safety, holy brother," answered the girl.

"Safety for the body," he murmured; "but what of the soul?"

He moved onward as far as the open door, his face looking wan and haggard in the uncertain moonlight. Suddenly he swayed forward and fell heavily. The long robe slipped back from his shoulder, disclosing a hundred bleeding wounds.

Ophir bore the unconscious body of the Penitente to the adobe chapter house, and in return for this kindness, one of the brothers found shelter for Marcia at the convent.

Ophir returned to the church. Left alone with his conscience, he was unable to close his eyes. He rehearsed every detail of the murder. Knowing the deep reverence with which the people had regarded the Healer, he could almost feel the noose tightening about his neck.

When the dawn came at last, Ophir was in a condition bordering on nervous prostration. The brothers of the Order of Penitentes took him in charge, and in a short time were possessed of his story. They showed him the only sure means of escape—spiritual escape—for the body was too base to receive other attention than the scourge.

Two days of fasting and prayer, with no sight or sound of the outer world, and Elder Ophir of the church of Mormon renounced all earthly ties. He preferred to be known as Brother Sombra of the Order of Penitentes.

This was at the beginning of Holy Week. The image of the Virgin had already been placed in the centre of the white chapel, with its blood-stained walls, and two lay brothers were out on the plains gathering cactus stalks.

The day for the public service at last arrived, and with it crowds of curious spectators. The excitement grew intense as the long line of half-naked expiants left the chapter-house, and started for the scene of their sufferings. Inside the chapel, piled knee-deep and surrounding the image of the Virgin on all sides, was a compact mass of cactus stalks. Over this awful bed of poisonous spines the brothers were to walk or crawl, pleading, meanwhile, for the forgiveness of their sins.

At the head of the long line came the new brother, towering above all the rest. They reached the door of the chapel.

"For the remission of sins," said Ophir, and stepped into the bristling spines of the cactus.

A cry broke from his lips, and he made as if to draw back, but the others pushed him forward. His feet were now bathed in blood, and his face was distorted with suffering. Many crowded on ahead of him, and the wails and prayers rose to a wild discordant clamor.

Strengthened by the frenzy of those about him, Ophir reached the image, embraced the cross beside it, and succeeded in returning to the door. The blood was gushing from his wounds, and he was raving like a madman. The crowd shrank back before him as he appeared. Out across the waste of sand he ran with incredible speed, on and on until the sickly stream of the Rio Grande flowed at his feet. Then he hurled himself down and groveled in the water.

When Ophir dashed from the chapel at Santa Cruz, a woman struggled through the crowd and started in pursuit. All the way across the sand she ran, though unable to keep up with his terrible pace. She did arrive, however, just in time to prevent the crazed man from drowning himself in the shallow water.

"Let me go, Marcia," he wailed, his great strength almost gone. "I must do it—for the remission of sins."

While Marcia was striving to drag him to a place of safety, three men were stealthily approaching from the opposite shore. The girl at last caught sight of them.

"Look," she cried wildly, "they are coming to take you! Father and two others."

Ophir lay on the sand, panting. He made no sign of having heard.

The girl drew a revolver from her dress and examined it carefully.

"Give it to me," said Ophir, so quietly that the girl was startled. "Give it to me," he repeated.

Marcia handed him the weapon without a word.

The three men drew nearer.

"Why don't you shoot?" Marcia cried. "Are you afraid?"

"No," Ophir said, "I am not afraid. I will shoot! It is not time yet."

Suddenly the men closed in on a run. Ophir raised the revolver and placed the muzzle against his head.

"Have you come to take me?" he called.

The men came to an abrupt halt.

"Yes," said one of them. "We want you for killing the Healer, the man of Sierra Abajo."

"I murdered him," said Ophir, slowly; "but my sin has been expiated. Don't come any nearer or I'll send this bullet through my head."

The men moved uneasily and held a hurried consultation.

"But you killed him," one of them began.

"Yes," said Ophir, "yes."

"But he liveth to make intercession for your sins," came a strange voice, and a new shadow fell across the dazzling sand.

All eyes were turned to the intruder—a man robed in white. His long, curling hair and forked beard of a dull copper hue; his eyes deep-set; his face calm and pale.

"The Healer!" cried one.

"The man of Sierra Abajo!" gasped Ophir.

"Come with me," said the Healer, stooping and lifting Ophir to his feet. "Come with me and I will do you good."

"I BELIEVE," said Joshua, one morning last spring, "that I shall get one o' these 'ere naughtymobeels; they'd be consid'able fun."

"I guess the fun would be mostly on the part of the neighbors, seein' us make fools of ourselves," I said. I didn't for a minute s'pose he was thinkin' serious of buyin' one o' them pesky, resky critturs.

"Wal, I dunno," says he, "why we ain't as good a right to hev one as anybody else has. They've got a new one up to Snow's and I reckon it's about time we put on a little style ourselves." Joshua means well but he is apt to go off on a target as they call it.

"That ain't no argyment," says I. "You know the Snows are city folks and haint nothin' else apparently to do when they come to the country but astonish their neighbors by the latest and most outlandish methods there is. I don't feel thet we've any call to do that, not at present. We may be able to set up a team of elephants with a nigger driver, but that don't make it proper nor edifyin'."

"A naughtymobeel runs awful slick and jes' like a streak o' greased lightnin'," he went on. "I never see anything git over the groun' faster; it beats a bicycle all holler."

"Perhaps you remember your experunce ridin' the bicycle?" I remarked, somewhat dry.

"Why, they scoot right along over everything that comes in their path," he kept on, not noticin' my hint about the bicycle; nor wantin' to, neither, for he ain't forgot how he made a fool of hisself that day; "they don't want to either, an' everything jest has to stand out from under."

"Be you goin' to see your way clear to gittin' that new phaeton this spring?" I inquired. "I've clumb in an' out o' that top buggy as long as I want to; an besides my rheumatiz is gittin' wuss an' wuss every year."

"A naughtymobeel is as easy as a rocking chair," he went on; "You would think you wuz a-ridin' on floury bags of ease if you had one."

"I ain't a-pinin' for floury bags to ride on."

I answered, somewhat tart; "a first-class upholstered phaeton is good enough for me. Upholstered in fine green broadcloth, with soft cushions to lean against an' that you can step into without a groan."

"All the bong-tong are ridin' in naughtymobeels this year," he replied, and with that attempt at argyment he picked up his last year's straw hat an' went out to see to his hoein'.

I thought no more of our conversation. I had known my partner to do a good many foolish things first and last, but I did not for a minute s'pose he would think anything more about this matter when he discovered the price of these infernal machines. So I kind o' forgot all about it until well along into June when one day I was startellated by hearin' the most awful noise I ever heerd in Pottsville. It was a cross between the hummin' of an enormous bumblebee and the roar of a cannon. I rushed to the door and there in our back yard stood one o' them machines. A strange man was atop of it and Joshua stood in front, admiration seated on his forehead and writ large all over his physiognomy. He looked kind o' sheepish when I appeared in the doorway.

"Goodness gracious me!" says I. "Will you tell me what this means?" I didn't s'pose he had done anything more than to get Snow's man to run one in.

"It means, madam," spoke up the stranger, "that your husband has got the bargain of his life."

"Yes," spoke up my partner, "Philura, it's dirt cheap. It's a real bargain."

"How much?" asked I, not sensin' even yet that he was actually buyin' the thing.

"The price is a thousand dollars, but they've knocked off a couple o' hundred and I'm goin' to turn in the steers and the lumber wagon and the grindstone an' a few other things to bring it down another hundred."

"You don't mean to stand there an' tell me to my face that you've actually bought that thing?" I gasped.

"Why, yes," chirped my pardner. "Ain't it a bute?"

I turned on my heel and walked in and sat down in my kitchen rocker and jes' set there, kind o' dazed. It was too late to say anything even if I could a' collected my wits enough to speak. But I was mad; oh, I was mad. I could have taken that man an' shook him jes' like a dog does a rat. He knew enough, however, to keep away till towards night, goin' off prancin' with the man that sold him the machine, I s'pose tryin' to learn how to run it.

When he come home to supper I had made up my mind not to speak about the thing till I had good cause. If all married women would use like caution they would save consid'able on family jars. So we talked about everything else but naughtymobeels and got along swimmin'.

It was a fortnight before he really dared to go off on the thing alone. Then he set forth, not another soul that understood infernal machines bein' nigh to warn nor to guide. I see him start off but I hadn't spoke since it came home nor I wouldn't. I knew I might never see my man again, but I also knew I couldn't speak without bringin' on a quarrel, an' I thought it better for him to depart in peace if he must go.

One hour later a man on horseback came flying into the yard and yelling:

"Aunt Philura, come quick. Git your bunnit and come. Your man's hurt."

"How?" says I.

"The naugtymobeel ran away with him, smashed up seven teams, killed a dog, lamed a cow, scat several women into hysterics and roused the hull town o' Pottsville Four Corners."

I lost no time in gittin' into my own buggy and settin' sail for the scene of action, where I found Joshua a disconsolate heap on the ground and the naughtymobeel keeled over on its side, lookin' more like a elephant on doughnuts than ever. When he see me he began to shed tears, (my pardner, not the machine) so nervous and hysteric had he got.

"Dang the concern!" he muttered when I was near enough to hear.

"Joshua Winter," says I, "don't you swear one word. I won't hear it. Whatever's happened it's all your own fault. Mebbe sometime you'll listen to me. Now tell me the hull story. Where be you hurt?"

"My bones are all of 'em broke and every member o' my body's sprained," he declared.

"Has a doctor been sent for?" I asked, but jest then Doctor Johnson druv in. In one minute more he was examinin' Joshua. When he got through he had found a broken shoulder, a sprained ankle, and seven bruises which he called "severe contusions". Then we loaded him carefully into our old buggy (which he had so despised) and carried him home, where we did him up in all sorts of lineaments and lotions and plasters and bandages and slings and things till he looked more like the mummy of Ram a Poo of ancient Egypt than like one o' the selectmen o' Pottsville. It was a week before he would talk about his axident, even to a reporter for the Freetown Bucket, (and there is nothin' Joshua loves more than to be interviewed for the county paper); then he opened his heart, under the combined influence of good nursin' and the strawberry shortcake which had been uncommon good that day.

"Dern a naughtymobeel!" he broke out, apropos of nothin', as the novel-books say.

"Why-fore?" says I, knowin' from past experunce that his time of confession had come, and not darin' to say more. For confession is indeed good for a man's soul.

"When I bought that pesky thing," he begun, "they told me I could git the hang of it in a week easy. I took a fortnight and studied it as I would a jography. Bill Snow can run his as easy as not an' I was ashamed not to run mine. So I started, not lettin' you know, for fear you'd worry; women-folks are silly about their men, you know," he put in with a touch of his old swagger; it madded me some but I held my tongue. "I started off down the hill in fine shape; I kep' lettin' on the power more an' more, an' went faster an' faster till I jes' flew. I run over Jones' dog before I knew it an' then I saw a team comin' and that we had got to meet where the road was narrow; then I tried to shut off the juice.

"But I found that it is a great deal easier to git to running wrong than to stop, as the elder would say; an' I couldn't stop for the life of me. The more I tried it the more it wouldn't quit that infernal pace. I smashed by the team takin' a wheel off an' makin' the woman who was drivin' faint away; then I ran agin ol' Jonas' cow and I s'pose I shall hev to pay damages. All the time that dern machine was a-buzzin' and clawin' along like mad. I couldn't turn it to right nor left, and as for stoppin' it, that was beyond me. Men, women, dogs, children, cats, geese, hens and chickens fled at our approach; and ef it hadn't finally turned over into the ditch so's 't it had to claw upside down I suppose we'd a been goin' yet."

He paused, evidently waiting for me to say something. But I remained true to first principles. I had made up my mind not to say a word about the machine.

"I s'pose the'll be a lot of damages to pay. Anybody put in a bill or anything yet?" he said after a time.

I went to the secretary and took out a package of papers that had been accumulating for several days. I read 'em slow and impressive.

"To one cow, $45. To one dog, $25 (that was that yeller cur of Jones's.) To bull pup, $10. To damages to team, $35; and so on down the list. The sum total is $245.67. Do you want the separate items read?" I added in a real kind tone.

Joshua give a groan. "No; I ain't feelin' as well as I was Philura. Won't you rub some of that new lineament on my arm?"

And while I was rubbin', gently but firmly, as a man ought to be handled, he said:

"I have decided to sell that naughtymobeel an' git a phaeton. I never see anything better named."

Wifehood as the Test of Womanhood.

The Good Woman Who Makes a Bad Wife.

Marriage was a serious thing to the grandparents and great grandparents of the present generation. No woman entered lightly upon wedlock. She knew that she was going to found a family, and that she must be equal to all the responsibilities of the position she assumed. She must be able to order her own household; to knit, sew, spin, make bread, butter, soap, candles, and indeed care for and clothe a whole family. She must not be craven when the whoop of the Indian warned of a dreadful danger. She must stand by her husband, and with him, gun in hand, keep the foe at bay.

How many women of to-day could undertake wifehood under such conditions? Few indeed. Not because the modern American woman lacks courage, but because she lacks as a rule the physical health which is the primary and indispensable qualification for a life such as was lived by the women of the past.

That is why a good woman may be a bad wife. Virtue and goodness are excellent things in women, but to guide a house and bear children demands above all sound physical health.

WOMEN CONVICTS.

To a great number of women the house they live in is almost on a par with a prison. It is prison-like in the monotonous regularity of daily duties; prison-like in the absence of all pleasure in what is done or joy in the doing. And the reason is to be found in womanly ill-health. Few women realize how intimately the general health is related to the health of the delicate womanly organs. A woman may suffer with heart "trouble," disorders of kidneys, liver or stomach, or with nervous prostration as a result of a diseased condition of the womanly organism. Many such women "doctor" for years for various diseases, and wonder why they don't get better. They can't get better until the womanly organism is entirely cured of its diseases.

This is not theory. It is a statement of simple facts founded upon the testimony of hundreds of thousands of women who have been cured of womanly diseases by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. They had been just "dragging around" for years, with throbbing heads and aching backs, nervous, dyspeptic, miserable. The once fresh colored cheeks had grown sallow, the eyes were dull, the body had lost its plumpness. They had in numerous instances tried many doctors and medicines, exhausting the local medical skill at their disposal. At last some friend or neighbor who has personally proved the curative power of "Favorite Prescription" recommends the use of this medicine and that in almost every case means another sick woman made well and strong.

ASTONISHED THE DOCTOR.

"When I first wrote to you I did not think I could live till I could get an answer to my letter," says Mrs. Isaac S. Harris, of Gayville, Yankton Co., S. Dak. "At that time I did not tell you everything. When I wrote you I had just got home from the Hospital at Minneapolis, Minn. Had been there one month. Could not see as I was benefitted any there, so I came home, thinking there was no help for me, and every one here said that I could not live. I would have sinking spells every day. Sometimes they would last an hour or more and I would be so weak it seemed almost impossible for me to breathe at all. Had night-sweats for three months, and my clothes would be just as wet as could be. Had uterine trouble also till I thought I would lose my mind; also had heart trouble so badly I did not know what to do. I suffered everything one could think of. We paid out so much money for doctoring, and there was nothing that did me any good till I consented to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I did not have any faith in these medicines at all, but I am only too glad to say that in three days after taking the medicine I could see a change for the better. In a week I could sit up and then I commenced the treatment for uterine trouble. In three weeks I was able to be around the house some. I have taken nearly twelve bottles of the medicine and still continue to take it. I am getting better right along, can ride or walk any place. I can never praise your medicine enough.

"The doctor here says that he never would have believed that your medicine could have done so much for any one if he had not seen what it has done for me. He also told me to keep on taking it, for he could not help me. I thank you a thousand times for your kind advice and for your medicine."

SAFE AND SURE.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is unrivaled as a safe and sure medicine for the cure of womanly diseases. It establishes regularity, dries unhealthy drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It is the best preparative for motherhood, giving vigor to the body and buoyancy to the mind. It so strengthens the organs of maternity that it makes the baby's advent practically painless. As a tonic for nursing mothers it has no equal. It increases the nutritive secretions and strengthens and nourishes both child and mother.

Weak and sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y.

Accept no substitute for "Favorite Prescription." There is nothing "just as good" for weak and sickly women.

A WONDERFUL BOOK.

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is a wonderful book, condensing as it does into 1008 large pages a mass of medical and hygienic information invaluable to every woman. It is especially wonderful in that it is sent free to any woman on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. ONLY A SILK HANDKERCHIEF.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY M. B. THRASHER.

Copyright, 1900, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

A HUGE white government transport was slowly threading her way through Boston harbor, the smoke pouring more and more lazily from her yellow funnels as she neared her deck at the Charlestown Navy Yard. Some of the steamers which she met saluted her with blasts from their whistles, and the persons on the ferry boats crossing to East Boston crowded to where they could get the best sight of the passengers on her deck.

On board the transport four hundred men and women gazed with eager eyes at each new object as it came in sight. They talked incessantly, in a soft, musical foreign tongue, and constantly they used their hands and arms to help out their words with un-American gesticulations. They were Cuban teachers, the first detachment of those who were coming to Cambridge for six weeks of instruction at Harvard College, in the English language and American ways.

A company of excursionists on a Nantasket steamer waved welcoming handkerchiefs when their boat met the transport. Instantly the deck of the government vessel broke out into a snow storm of answering signals. In the cloud of white, one man was conspicuous because he was waving a colored silk handkerchief fashioned after the design of an American flag—faded, but still a flag.

A keen-eyed reporter on a tug accompanying the transport saw the flag, and made a memorandum in his note book. In his story of the welcome to the Cuban teachers, which was printed in his paper that night, he told of the incident, and the artist who was with him ran in a sketch which showed the Cuban waving the Stars and Stripes among four hundred handkerchiefs.

Two days later the morning edition of all the city papers contained the following advertisement, printed in both English and Spanish:

"Will the Cuban teacher who has in his possession a faded silk handkerchief woven as an American flag, and who waved it in salute when the transport McAndrew was coming up Boston harbor, be so good as to communicate with John H. Renfrew," at an address which followed.

John Renfrew was a young man who was studying law in the office of a well-known Boston lawyer, and supporting himself in the mean time as best he could, just as thousands of other young men have done, who, like him, combined a lofty ambition with low finances. Two years before—just out of college—he had volunteered for the Spanish war and had seen six months' service in Cuba.

Into the office in which this man was struggling over a complicated legal document, one day, about a week after the advertisement had appeared, there walked two Cuban men, inquiring with solicitous politeness for "Meester Renfray."

When they became convinced that the young lawyer was the man they were looking for, one of the foreigners cautiously drew from his pocket the faded handkerchief. Renfrew took it—almost snatched it, in fact—and ran it hastily through his fingers until he found in one corner the remnant of what once evidently had been an embroidered letter "R."

The dialogue which followed would have been ludicrous, to a listener, if it had not been obvious that the three men were so desperately in earnest.

Renfrew knew no Spanish, except the little he had picked up while a soldier, and the most of that, naturally enough was better adapted for talk around a camp fire than for a legal conference. His visitors could speak still less English. At the end of ten minutes, one of them springing to his feet and talking excitedly to his companion, made Renfrew understand, as he flourished his hands in desperation, that the two visitors were going for an interpreter.

An interpreter seemed hard to find, though, for the Cubans did not return that day. When they did come, the next morning, they brought with them one of the Harvard teachers, whose help soon made explanations easy.

"May I ask where you found that silk handkerchief?" the lawyer said.

"I found it tied to a bush, one day in summer, two years ago," the teacher was translating the Cuban's words. "There had been a battle between the Americans and the Spaniards, and the latter had run away. I had been hiding in the forest for many days, and I had been starved before I went into the forest. Many of those I loved were dead already then. When I saw the little flag on the tree it meant much to me. It meant that a new life had come. I took it from the tree and I have kept it"—the Spanish word which he used meant "cherished it with my heart's love"—"ever since."

Renfrew, looking hastily up to see why the man had stopped speaking, saw that the Cuban's eyes were full of tears.

"Could you find that place again?" he asked. "I mean the bush on which the handkerchief was hanging."

"Surely, Senor," said the Cuban, when he fully understood the question. "It is on the outskirts of a forest in which I have hunted since I was a boy."

The lawyer studied the face of the man before him for a whole minute. Then he said: "There are five thousand dollars in gold, and the deeds to a sugar plantation buried near that tree, where no one can find them. No one has any claim on them but me. If you will guide me to the tree, one-half of the gold or one-fourth of the land is yours."

The Cuban's face grew dark, and his eyes flashed, as he began to understand the words which the interpreter was translating to him.

"Tell him," he burst forth, "that a Cuban patriot does not bargain for money with a soldier of the army which set his country free. Tell him I will guide him to the tree on which the flag was tied, when I go back to Cuba, and leave him there alone."

It took ten minutes of earnest expostulation on Renfrew's part, and of anxious choice of Spanish words on the part of the interpreter, to still the tempest which had been raised. When this was done, and Cuban sentiments of honor satisfied, the lawyer told his story.

"When I went to Cuba," he said, "my only brother, two years older than I, went with me. We were privates in the same company. My brother,"—he stopped for a moment, and then went on—"died in a hospital tent, and is buried in Cuba. One day when out scouting alone he ran upon two Spaniards who had bound an old Cuban man to a tree, and were torturing him with the points of their machetes. One of the Spaniards he shot; the other ran away.

"He carried the old man to a hut in the forest, to which the man directed him, and did what he could to make him comfortable. The next day the old man died, but not until he had given to my brother the gold and the deeds of which I have told you. 'They are yours,' he said to my brother. 'I have no one to leave them to. I am the last of my family. All who were dear to me have died or have been killed. Those devils whom you saved me from knew of my gold and were trying to make me tell them where it was. I would have died first, to spite them. I give it to you, now, because you are a man of the race that has set my country free.'

"He died," Renfrew went on, "and my brother buried him. He took the gold and the papers and started to return, but he found that during the day and the night he had been detained, a force of Spaniards had come down from the hills, and were then between him and the American lines. He tried to get past them, but found the enemy getting so thick that he was afraid he would be captured, loaded down as he was. He hid his gold, and the papers, marking a tree near the place with his handkerchief, and slipped between the Spanish sentries. He knew they could not hold that ground more than a day or two longer, and then planned to return; but the next day he was helpless with fever, and never stood upon his feet again. Before he died he told me about the old man, and the gold, and the handkerchief. I half thought it was a delusion of his fevered brain, and when, a few days afterwards, I tried to find the spot and could not, I felt sure that his mind had been wandering. Now I know he was right.

"How soon will you go to Cuba with me?" he asked a moment later.

That is why there was one Cuban teacher who did not remain in Cambridge to receive the benefits of the summer school. The man went directly back to Cuba with Renfrew, on the first steamer they could get; and now he is the owner of two hundred acres of the best sugar land in the island.

Renfrew may practice law sometime. He does not mean to give it up, he says; but at present he is busily engaged in studying Spanish and in planning how to invest his capital, so as to get as much as possible of his great plantation into bearing condition.

One good round portion of the money, though, he set aside first of all, and with it there is being built a neat schoolhouse, in which one of the teachers who went to Cambridge is going to be installed, to teach American ways to Cuban children. On the wall beside the door of the schoolhouse is a bronze tablet, and on the tablet is carved, in Spanish and in English:

"The lives of two brave men, a Cuban and an American, made this school possible. May its work help to unite the two races which its founders represented."

ARRESTING A SIWASH.

A TALE OF THE NORTHWEST COAST.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY WAKEFIELD SHAW.

Copyright, 1900, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

NO doubt travelers spending much time in any section of our western frontier, can recall some test of courage requiring more than the ordinary amount of nerve, that was taken by the performer purely as a matter of course.

This episode is merely one anecdote of bravery displayed at various times by a Captain Baker who trapped and prospected along the southeast Alaskan coast during the early days of the salmon canning industry. He was a broad shouldered, mild spoken man, and by sheer strength of personality was feared and hated by every Indian in the Tongas tribe. Today he is known as "Skookum Baker" because he once followed and captured an out-lawed Siwash when none other dared go.

Although a startling fact, there is a custom still in vogue with that half-civilized people which demands the killing of two white men for the death of every Indian, caused either directly or indirectly by a pale face; and there is no feeling of the injustice on their part, should the real offender fail to be among those struck down by the avenger's hand.

Being possessed of little real courage, this killing is carried on with a stealth and cunning exhibited solely by an Indian; they will seldom fight, save the enemy be at a disadvantage, or when cornered and brought to bay.

Even this being true does not detract in any way from the fearlessness displayed by Capt. Baker in the action recorded below.

Many moons ago, when whiskey smuggling was in its infancy, a man named Ford, arrived at Ketchikan in a small sloop, with a quantity of this liquor in the hold. A party of Siwashes went aboard, and set sail for—no one knows where. It is presumed that the party while under the influence of their contraband cargo, were drowned during a heavy squall.

At all events, after the discovery of the bodies some days later, the tribe held a hyiu pow-pow in the council lodge, that stands to day in the center of the village, during which the "tyees" (big men) spoke their minds, and agreed that twelve whites must die.

Toward the end of the ceremonies, Cultus Johnson, a bold bad spirit, brought forth from some hiding place a half keg of Hudson's Bay rum. Its arrival was the signal for a general and exciting good time. Cultus, whose brain was soon fired to a dangerous heat with an idea of displaying his prowess before the belle of the tribe, seized his Winchester and reeled toward the door which he threw open, and for one moment stood with sullen profile silhouetted against the orange sunset streaming through the mountain gaps on Gravina to the westward. Then he strode out into the October afternoon. There was murder in his eye, and his heart was bad.

Half a hundred yards away on the opposite side of the stream, a prospector, named McKenzie, was unloading a skiff upon the beach, unconscious that death was lurking near. An Indian is a remarkably poor shot; but in this instance, fate ordained that the hastily aimed bullet should speed toward its mark with an accuracy that would have been exceptional had the wretch been sober.

A cry, a fall upon the slippery kelp—that was all; but savage vengeance had wrecked itself on the first of the twelve, and poor McKenzie was that man. The rising tide lapped eagerly at the lifeless fingers clutching the sand, as if to hasten away and forever bury all evidence of the foul deed. This happened long ago, when the red men outnumbered the whites six to one. Although several of the latter were on the veranda of the trading-post and saw the act, none dared go to the council lodge and demand the surrender of the murderer.

Late on the following afternoon, McKenzie's partner, none other than Capt. Baker, who had been hunting that fall on the headwaters of the Chickamin River, returned to the town and learned of the previous day's affair from the little handful of excited men clustered about the post.

With the same indomitable will which characterized his later actions, he gathered some twenty armed men, and crossing the creek, commanded the Indians to give up their man. It was too late. Cultus Johnson with two companions had fled in a canoe to the village of Kassan on the Prince of Wales Island.

Nothing daunted, Baker called for volunteers to accompany him, and aid in arresting the outlaw. Much to his surprise no one would go; and in a moment of disappointed rage at their timidity, he fiercely berated them with scathing taunts—and went alone. Obtaining a rusty pair of handcuffs, and loading his little Columbia River sloop with a month's provisions, he hoisted sail that same night, and resolutely headed for Karta Bay, a distance of possibly forty miles.

Gale after gale of wind and rain encompassed his little vessel, but four days later, on a crisp fall morning, you might have seen his boat urged haltingly across the glittering surface of the great inlet, as he labored with the long sweep oars. At the village, a Siwash more or less kindly disposed, informed him that the men in question had gone down the east coast of the island, fishing for oligan.

Curbing his impatience at a second disappointment, he turned the prow of his sturdy craft upon the seemingly hopeless task of finding that Indian on an island which is one hundred and fifty miles in length, and whose shore line is so indented with bays and long inlets, that there are more miles of inland sea-beach than it has total circumference. It is hardly necessary to give in detail the routine of the days that followed. There were many nights passed under the friendly stars, and dreary ones spent in the drizzling wet beneath some giant cedar; and there were solitary meals cooked at noon-day on some rocky beach, or far up in a secluded cove. It was for his partner's death to spur him on.

It was expedient to use the utmost care if the murderer was to be taken alive, for a Siwash could be shot any day; but to turn one over to the authorities at Wrangel Garrison unaided, was entirely another story.

At the close of one afternoon, many days later, when the wild geese were honking their way to bed, high above the waters of Cholmondeley Sound, and the gulls were cooing near him within the lengthening shadows of the shore, he forced his way along with the heavy oars, seeking a camping place.

Suddenly his wandering eye rested upon a thin column of smoke rising lazily above a wooded point near at hand that he must needs be discovered ere gaining the shelter of some friendly cover. Perchance it was the camp of a trapper or prospector, as isolated as himself. No, surely it must be the Indians', for the smoke was blue and thin as vapor, and floated cautiously from the fir-tops, as if anxious to escape the hunter's vision.

The Captain's keen eye and active brain rapidly noted these things, and weighed the chances for victory or defeat. Then he resolved upon a plan so bold and aggressive, that without a doubt it was the sole reason for its complete success. Loosening his revolvers in their holsters, he pulled steadily toward the landing, never once slackening speed until the keel grated harshly on the pebbles. Stepping calmly ashore, he strolled toward the Indians, who glanced up from their cooking with apparent indifference. There could be no danger from this silent man who approached unarmed and in such leisurely fashion. It was more than likely that he had yet to learn of the killing.

There was no settled line of action in his mind, but while advancing, Baker carefully surveyed the encampment; and sparred for a time by addressing them with the usual greeting—"Klahowya."

Perhaps his tone, or possibly the forced smile failed to disguise the intense glitter of his eye, and aroused suspicion. At all events, their expressions instantly changed from idle curiosity to that of alert comprehension, and they sprang for their rifles. The time had now come for decisive action. Baker saw this, and with the calm smile of one well versed in what he is about to do, whipped out his big Colt's, and at its report the foremost Siwash threw up his hands and pitched heavily forward upon his face. The ringing command in their own tongue, "No! Touch not the rifles!" brought the others to an abrupt halt.

Motioning them to the opposite side of the fire, he tossed over the manacles, and explained in Chinook that they were to be placed on Cultus Johnson's wrists by his companion. An impatient movement of the deadly revolver hastened the operation, which was executed in sullen silence. Then Baker securely bound the remaining native, turned his back on the convulsive twitching of the smitten one, and coolly helped himself to the pot of "mowitsh" stew, keeping a close watch meanwhile, on the scowling savages seated across the way.

When finished, it was nearly dark. Taking the three captured weapons, he marched the prisoners down to the boat, helped Cultus to a seat amid-ships below the sweep of the boom, and told him plainly that he should kill him at the first hostile move.

Making snug for an all-night run, he informed the remaining Indian that he was "Sorry ter hafter plug his friend," and that he would find his rifle at the village on his return. Then loosening his bonds, the Captain ordered him back to the camp.

Standing in the stern facing his captive, he doggedly shoved the boat ahead of him into the gathering dusk. Toward midnight a strong wind sprang up. Thankfully hoisting the sail, he guided the dancing little vessel out of the sound, and turned up the Clarence Straits, where with a fair wind, he squared away for Wrangel, more than fifty miles to the north'rd.

History failed to record the drift of their conversation, if there was any—which is doubtful.

This much we know, that, after sailing all that night and most of the following day, the fearless Captain arrived at Wrangel Island, and handed over his captive to the officers of the fort, who summarily dealt him his just deserts.

This is the story in the abstract, with half the interest lost in omitting the quaintness of the Captain's own words. There was no boasting or self-conceit, and it was told as disinterestedly as though of another person.

One should have heard it as we heard it, while clustered about the open fire that evening, when the fierce Taku wind was hurling the first new snow against our snug log camp, and when the warmth within was so in contrast to the wintry night without, as to be conducive to the reminiscences of bygone days, when Alaska's frontier was more primitive and unknown than it is to-day.

SWIFT HORSE.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY F. E. BURNHAM.

Copyright, 1900 by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

ROGER McGregor was engineer on the Night Mail running between Rochester and Montreal; his engine pulled out of Rochester each evening at seven o'clock, returning the following morning at six.

One evening twenty miles out of Rochester, McGregor's keen eyes made out the form of a man lying a few feet from the rails. It was a bitter cold night, else had the engineer paid no attention to the fact, tramps being a common sight with the railroad men. As it was, McGregor applied the brakes and presently brought the great train to a standstill. Returning, he found that the man had been overcome by the cold, and with the assistance of a brakeman he was carried into the baggage-car, where he speedily recovered, more or less touched by frost, but otherwise none the worse for his experience. The rescued man proved to be one of a company of Indians who were in winter quarters in a neighboring town. From that night he was McGregor's most steadfast friend, scarcely a week passing that he failed to appear in the railroad yard at Rochester, bringing some trifle to the engineer who had saved him.

McGregor's boy, a child scarcely five years old, played about the yard while his father was attending to his engine, and pleased that the boy took interest in the iron horse, McGregor frequently lifted him into the cab, showing him how to open the throttle, blow the whistle and ring the bell, and the end of it all was that "Little Mac," as the men called him, was able to start the great engine and make a prodigious amount of noise with the whistle and bell, a fact that mightily pleased the engineer.

One afternoon, just at nightfall, McGregor was called into the office suddenly, leaving the boy near the engine, amusing himself with bits of stone with which he was building diminutive walls. Ten minutes later, when he returned, the child was missing. There was something else missing, too, and it is not surprising that he noticed it the instant he entered the yard—it was the great mogul engine.

In the twinkling of an eye it dawned on McGregor that the disappearance of the two was more than a coincidence; he knew that none of the men would have dared to disturb his engine, and that the child would dare, merely because he knew no better. In less than thirty seconds McGregor had reached the telegraph office, excitedly told of the runaway, and ten seconds later a dispatch had reached Clinton, ten miles down the road, commanding the agent at the point to stop the engine. It was a wild order, as McGregor and the operator knew a moment after it was sent, but at such times men are apt to send insane orders.

Outside the station was Swift Horse, the Indian McGregor had saved. His keen eyes had taken in the situation, and as the engineer came out of the office he seized his arm, pointed to an engine that stood in the yard, then to himself, leaped from the inward to the outward bound tracks, and shouted—"I jump-stop big horse!"

McGregor was ready to adopt any expedient and before the words were scarcely out of the Indian's mouth, he had dashed into the office again and worded another dispatch to follow the first.

"Clear the outward track!" such was the terse despatch which the operator at Clinton received and which he obeyed.

Meanwhile, McGregor, Swift Horse and McGregor's fireman, were boarding the engine to which the Indian had pointed, and they were not long in rolling out onto the main line. The switches had been set so that McGregor's engine must have taken the inward track, and with the turning of one more, the pursuing engine shot onto the outward rails, and in far less time than it takes to tell it, the engine was gathering speed under an open throttle and forced draft, the fireman throwing in shovelful after shovelful of coal as the iron steed leaped over the rails.

McGregor knew that there was a freight train ahead of him, but confident that the agent at Clinton would give him a clear road, he was crowding all possible steam, anticipating the side-tracking of the freight. On the other hand, the Southern Express was flying toward him on the inward track, bearing down upon McGregor's engine, with its diminutive engineer.

At Clinton the agent frantically swung his lantern before the pursuing engine, the gathering darkness making a lantern necessary. McGregor applied the brakes, and the next instant he knew the meaning of the signal; just around the curve beyond the depot he saw the rear lights of the freight bobbing over the switch-frogs at the siding. For a moment there was a grinding of brakes and then the switch-light turned from red to green, and with a bound the engine leaped ahead, as McGregor threw open the throttle.

There was a straight three mile drop ahead and then a sharp bend in the road. Half way down this grade McGregor made out a dark object on the opposite track; it required little guessing to understand that this was the runaway locomotive. Scarcely had McGregor discovered this, when like a fixed star, the headlight of the Express appeared at the foot of the grade.

Swift Horse was standing beside the engineer, and the latter was doing his best to make the Indian understand how to close the throttle and apply the brakes.

Swiftly was the engine overhauling the pursued. Swift Horse sprang nimbly upon the coal in the tender, gathering for the spring upon which the life of McGregor's boy and the lives of the passengers of the Express depended. Closer and closer the two engines drew, and there was a moment when they were plunging down the grade neck and neck, as it were.

Suddenly he crouched like a tiger, and the next instant leaped high in the air, straight toward McGregor's engine. The little engineer, unconscious of his peril, clapped his hands in childish glee as the Indian jumped. There was the merest fraction of a second that the Indian tottered on the swaying tender, and then with a bound the brave redskin reached the cab, shot back the throttle and applied the brakes. There was a tremendous pounding of the rails as the gripped wheels slid along, and for a time it seemed as though the momentum alone would produce a collision with the Express. Nearer and nearer the engine and the train drew, the Indian gripping the throttle desperately with one hand, while with the other he clutched the child; the engineer of the Express reversing his engine as soon as he discovered the danger, and doing his best to avert a disaster. Then the heavy train began to back down the grade and one minute later the truant engine came to a full stop. Twenty feet away the Express stopped, the two engines glowering at each other like angry monsters, one hissing and snorting, while the other only coughed and wheezed from sheer lack of steam.

Swift Horse grunted and turned away in a much disgusted frame of mind from the crowd of passengers who quickly surrounded him, eager to learn the details of the exciting race. He was not accustomed to praise and attention and would have much preferred riding quietly back to Rochester.

The rifle which McGregor presented the Indian a few days later, however, delighted the heart of the simple redskin.

"THE LADY WITH THE LAMP."

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

ON the fifteenth of May there was celebrated in England the birthday of a woman who is loved and venerated by all classes almost as much as the Queen herself is loved and venerated. This woman is Florence Nightingale. Her services to her country and to humanity in general have made her one of the best beloved women in the world. It is worth much to know about the life and work of a woman like Florence Nightingale. It is an inspiration to us all to know of any good life, and Miss Nightingale is a woman who has "lived worthily."

She was born in the city of Florence and was named for the place of her birth. Her father's name was Shone, but he changed it to Nightingale in order that he might inherit a large property left to him on condition that he thus change his name. He was a man of considerable wealth before inheriting this property and his daughter Florence was reared amid the refinement and ease of wealth. She received an excellent education and learned to speak French, German and Italian with all the ease and accuracy with which she spoke her own tongue. She was one of the most accomplished young girls of her day and might have shone brilliantly in the fashionable society of the time. But she cared nothing for fashion and society, and while she was still a young woman she began to give her time and thought to the improvement of the hospital system then in vogue in England. When she was thirty she entered an institution of Protestant Sisters of Mercy at Kaiserwerth in Germany. This institution was at that time one of the best training schools for nurses in the country, and Miss Nightingale here trained herself for the work she had chosen. She also studied at the hospitals in Berlin, Lyons, Brussels, Constantinople, Alexandria and the war hospitals of the French and Sardinians. Her experiences and the knowledge of the hospital systems obtained on battle fields filled her with pity and sympathy for the suffering soldiers and for the inefficient way in which they were cared for, and she resolved to better this system.

From her early childhood she had a heart that overflowed at sight of suffering, and she was always eager to help the sick. It is said that one of her first patients was a shepherd dog. Some boys had thrown stones and hurt the dog's leg so badly that some men were going to kill the poor beast to put him out of his misery. He would not allow any one to touch the wound until Florence Nightingale, then but a little girl, went up to him and said gently in a caressing tone:

"Poor Cap! Poor fellow!"

The dog looked up into her eyes trustingly, and, while she talked to him and stroked his head, he allowed his leg to be examined. She was told that there were no bones broken, but that the leg was badly bruised and that it ought to be fomented to take the swelling down. "Fomented" was such a big and strange word that the little girl did not understand what it meant.

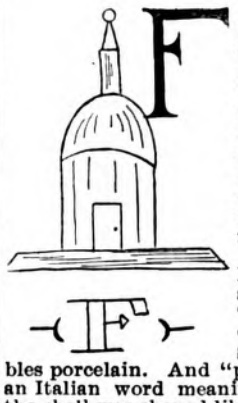
"How do you foment?" she asked.

"With cloths dipped in boiling water," was the reply.

"That is quite easy," she said, and at once went to work applying the compress of old rags soaked in hot water until the dog was free from pain and out of danger.

This little incident made a deep impression on the mind of the little Florence, and increased her interest in suffering animals as well as in suffering human beings.

In 1851 Miss Nightingale took charge of a home for infirm and invalid governesses in London, and she was engaged in this work when the Crimean war began. In the spring of 1854 an English army of 25,000 men sailed for the Crimea, and in the following September the battle of Alma was fought. The troops had been inactive much of the time and cholera and other diseases raged so among them that at one time there were more than thirteen thousand sick in the hospitals, and in some of the hospitals the death rate rose as high as fifty-two per cent. Surgical operations were followed by gangrene in four-fifths of the cases operated upon and the condition of affairs in the hospitals was something deplorable. When these facts became known in England they aroused the combined pity and indignation of the entire English people, and five millions of dollars were quickly contributed for relief funds. Everything that could possibly be needed in the way of medical supplies were sent to the suffering soldiers, and doctors by the dozen were also sent. But there was still something lacking. Sir Sidney Herbert, of the War Department, was right when he said, "It is a woman's work, and there is one woman in England who can set this right, and that woman is Florence Nightingale." He meant by this that what the sick soldiers off in the Crimea needed more than anything else was such nursing as only wise and devoted women could give.



Sir Sidney wrote to Miss Nightingale asking her if she would go to Scutari and organize a nursing service in the hospitals there. He did not know when he sent this letter to Miss Nightingale that she had already sent him one offering her services in the Crimea and asking that she be sent to the relief of the sick.

Within a week Miss Nightingale was on her way to the Crimea with forty women nurses. They reached Scutari on the fourth of November, the night before the battle of Inkerman. They found nearly twenty-five hundred sick soldiers, and the battle of Inkerman added twenty-five hundred more wounded soldiers to those already in the hospitals so that there were in all five thousand sick and wounded men to be cared for. Miss Nightingale found things in a wretched state in Scutari. There was no laundry, no kitchen in which to prepare food, no systematic care, and, indeed, no system of any kind in caring for the sick and wounded. One could not imagine a more deplorable state of affairs, and any woman but Florence Nightingale would have given up in despair and felt herself to be helpless in the face of all the obstacles before her. But Miss Nightingale rose to the occasion. She set to work with fierce energy and within a week she had in operation a well-equipped kitchen in which meals could be prepared for a thousand men. She had other kitchens built together with laundries and bath houses and in an incredibly short time cleanliness and comfort and order took the place of the squalor and utter discomfort Miss Nightingale had found on her arrival. It is true that she had unlimited means at her disposal, but more than this was required to do all that was done for the comfort of the soldiers. Miss Nightingale went here and there and everywhere by night and by day directing her assistants and performing the most menial services with her own hands. She would walk between the long rows of cots, lamp in hand at night, speaking a word of kindness to every sufferer and laying her hand on fevered brows. One soldier said of her: "She would speak to one and another, and nod and smile to many more; but she could not do it to all, you know, for we lay there by hundreds; but we could kiss her shadow as it lay on the wall at night, and lay our heads on our pillows again, content." She was in the hospitals so much at night that she came to be called "the lady with the lamp."

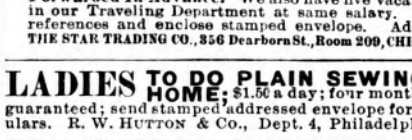
Through the faithful, untiring and unselfish and intelligent efforts of Miss Nightingale and her assistants the death rate at Scutari was soon reduced from forty-five per cent. to two per cent. Miss Nightingale remained at her post until peace was declared. Then she traveled back to England under an assumed name to avoid publicity and the public demonstrations she had been led to believe would be made if the people were aware of her presence in the cities and towns through which she must pass on her way home. Nothing is more abhorrent to Miss Nightingale than publicity, and she sought to avoid the ovations prompted by even the most sincere gratitude of her countrymen.

CHINA TRADE MARKS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

FROM China undoubtedly came our first porcelain. It is uncertain just when it was invented, probably between 206 B. C. and A. D. '87. It is said Marco Polo in his travels visited one of the places where it was made, and wrote that from there it was shipped all over the world.

Our word "porcelain" was derived probably from the Italian "porcellana," the name of a courie shell whose glazed surface resembles porcelain. And "porcellana" came from an Italian word meaning a small pig, which the shell was shaped like.



Probably the earliest manufacture in Europe was at Florence under the supervision of the Grand Duke of Tuscany between 1575-1580. A successful imitation of Chinese porcelain was dependent upon two essential ingredients—china-clay and china-stone. But much of the early china was formed from a similar substance answering practically the same purpose.

It is claimed that Venice had a manufactory as early as 1470, but none of this work has ever yet been recognized. With a possible exception of this potter at Venice and the products of the Duke of Ferrara, what is known as the Medici porcelain of Florence is the oldest continental work. Of this there are only thirty-six pieces in existence. The mark is the Florentine cathedral over an F in blue. The finest and best truly hard porcelain and the nearest to that of the Chinese was made in Dresden and the crossed swords were adopted as a distinctive mark. This mark probably and the Dresden pattern of decoration, have been more counterfeited than any other.

Manufactories have been started all over France at different times. The best work today probably at Limoges is done by Haviland & Co. At Sevres two men whose names begun with L started a pottery and their mark has always been two L's crossed in various designs. Another very prosperous china factory is Copeland & Sons, whose mark is usually two C's interlaced in green. In England, Chelsea, Worcester and Derby were at one time the most flourishing factories. Chelsea's most common mark was an anchor in red, purple, or gold. A black D surmounted by a crown is the Derby mark.

Cookworthy first discovered in England the true china-clay and for about three years had a factory at Plymouth. The alchemistic sign for tin, which resembles the Arabic numbers 2 and 4 in combination was used. At the works in Briston this sign was also used with three others. Bow (Stratford-le-Bow) used anchor and dagger in red.

Worcester is the only one of five great English porcelain works whose exact origin is known. And the celebrated Royal Worcester is probably unsurpassed in the world. A crescent was the original Worcester mark.

DRESDEN • BOW • SEVRES·WORCESTER·

Then followed various forms of W. Many pieces we find with B. F. B. surmounted by a crown. The initials standing for Barr and Flight who were at one time owners. The present mark, however, is a circle whose surface is interlaced with W's and surmounted by a crown.

In America excellent work has already been done. The Green Point porcelain works flourished only for a time 'tis said, because it lacked supporters. Often we become tired of looking only for the marks "Made in Germany," "Made in Austria," or "Made any where but at home." If we should insist on a "Made in America" sign our own country without doubt would in a short time be foremost in producing unparalleled specimens of workmanship and art.

The average daily earning of a locomotive is about $100.

Nervous Troubles

That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have cured obstinate cases of locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, and St. Vitus' dance, is the best evidence that they will cure all lesser nervous disorders, because the principle in the threatment of all nervous diseases is the same. Nervousness is a question of nutrition. Food for the nerves is what is needed and the best nerve food in the world is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Mrs. Annie H. Magee, of Port Austin, Mich., says: "My daughter, Jean, was always a delicate child, had stomach trouble, nervous debility and general weakness. She had to be taken out of school and kept from all study for nearly five years. About three years ago she began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and I am happy to say they have helped her to become a healthy, happy girl who no longer needs medicine of any kind. It scarcely seems possible she can be the same one who a few years ago was a delicate, almost a hopeless, sufferer."

OUR ALASKA BOUNDARY.

SECRETARY HAY.

THERE has been a great deal said concerning the Alaskan boundary, and much misinformation exists throughout the country in regard to what it all means, and what the contention between America and Great Britain is upon the subject. We shall endeavor in this article to explain the whole situation, and the present condition of the disputed territory.

In the year 1867 William H. Seward, then Secretary of State, after much consideration purchased from the Russian government the territory of Alaska which was valuable to that government on account of furs, fisheries and timber, and a few known slight deposits of metals which had not been advantageously worked by the owners. The territory was merely a fur trading post for a few Russian companies, all merged into one large company under the protection of the government itself. On account of the very cold climate of St. Petersburg in the winter season, furs have unusual value for the people, and it was on account of this demand that this great company had established trading posts in the territory. The value of the country itself was very little apparently outside this one industry. It will be remembered that at the time of the Civil War Russia had shown great friendliness to the United States, and had averted foreign interference in favor of the Confederacy. It is probable that a feeling of gratitude on the part of the administration had very much to do with the final purchase of the territory.

As always happens in cases of expansion, the announcement that this territory was to be acquired by the United States met with the wildest and most violent opposition. No terms could be too coarse to be applied to a statesman who was far seeing enough to recognize the unusual value of what appeared to most people as a bleak and unknown country. A glance at the papers of that day will show that the Alaska purchase was taken up by the opposition as a subject for the most complete ridicule. It was as if the present administration should suggest the purchase of lands lying around the north pole. It is almost incredible that so little could have been known 35 years ago of a tract of land so large and so near to our own country; but the observations of the leading editors of that day would suggest that they were writing on continents on the planet Mars.

Notwithstanding this opposition all over the country, the bill was passed through Congress, and the country purchased in October, 1867, for $7,000,000, with all rights and benefits. In due course of time, many industries sprang up along the coast of Alaska, and permanent settlements in addition to those already formed by Russian communities were established at different points, notably upon the seacoast. The valuable sea fisheries, which became such a subject of contention between the two English speaking countries, assumed enormous proportions; and in addition to this, the art of preserving food in tin grew to such an extent that it embraced salmon and other fish on the Alaskan coast, and as those fish swarmed the rivers leading from the sea, it became notable for its exportations.

About 15 years ago, the well-defined rumors which had always prevailed relative to gold in the Alaska territory became confirmed in many ways, and an expedition was sent from the United States under Frederick Schwatka, who had gained fame as an Arctic explorer, to establish more definitely a knowledge of the value of the Alaskan possessions.

If any person will look at the map of Alaska, he will notice that the coast extends down in a series of indented bays until it reaches a point of demarcation on the British Columbia coast. On the western side of the territory, and following the general trend of the coast are ranges of mountains, which lie comparatively near the coast.

The real interior of Alaska lies to the eastward and northward of these mountains and behind them, and as these mountains make a natural water-shed, the course of the rivers is northward. Therefore, commencing very close to the coast, but on the mountains to the north and east, are the head waters of the Yukon river, which is the largest one in Alaska, and forming in its flow the famous Yukon valley. This great river flows northward and westward until it flows into the Pacific far in the northern country, and at its mouth it is frozen the greater part of the year.

To reach the Yukon valley, then, from the United States, it is necessary to sail up to some of the southern coast towns, cross over the mountains at one of the famous passes, and reaching the head waters of the Yukon to descend that stream until the point desired is reached. Different rivers flow into the Yukon from each side and come down from the gold bearing country, and at the mouths of these rivers it is customary for expeditions to diverge to go up the stream to such a place as is desired.

The southern point of Alaska, as will be seen by the accompanying map, reaches far down into Canada and makes but a narrow strip of the southern end of our territory; but that very feature makes it a troublesome thing to our Canadian neighbors on account of the indefinite terms of the original treaty which, briefly expressed, is that the boundary line shall follow the coast at a distance of ten marine leagues to the interior.

The contention of Canada was that the boundary followed the continental coast line ten marine leagues inland, jumping from headland to headland. This would have given them control of all water access to the gold fields by the Dalton trail, White Pass and Chilkoot Pass, control of all the Lynn Canal and of Dyea and Skaguay.

The United States contended for the line on all the recent maps, which followed the windings or sinuosities of the coast, put the Lynn Canal in American territory and gave to the United States Dyea, Skaguay and Porcupine Creek. The United States felt that it had a substantial case and could hold its claim.

Canada wanted to compromise and suggested its willingness to abandon its claim to Dyea and Skaguay if the United States would only permit it to have Pyramid Harbor, so that it could have a tidal entry to the Yukon region. The United States held that compromise was out of the question, as its boundary line was the correct one.

Canada, in its desire to get a port of entry, then offered to arbitrate. Arbitration would have meant, in the first place, an admission of the United States that there was a flaw in its contention, and, in the second place, would have led to a compromise, and the permanent boundary yet to be fixed would have been run somewhere between the Canadian and American lines. Thus Canada would have got what it wanted—a deep water harbor on the Lynn Canal.

To this Secretary Hay would not consent, believing that the claim of the United States admitted of no question, and as a matter of fact the last reply of the United States, presented to Great Britain by Ambassador Choate months ago, was so strong and convincing in support of the American contention that it has never been answered, and State Department officials believe that the boundary experts of Great Britain and Canada will not be able to answer it to their own benefit.

But in the meantime, while the United States was standing out for its territory, a portion of which Canada wanted to get by calling for arbitration of a question that was not possible of arbitrament, something had to be done to ease the tension at these southern gateways to the Klondike. No one would desire a fight between England and the United States over the Klondike gold diggings, and yet the embers of war were smouldering there.

Canadian claims, somewhat shifty and altered from time to time, were supported by all the public men of the Dominion, and were made in the hope of getting a deep water harbor, and the United States purposed holding the ground.

This government sent troops to Dyea and Skaguay. Canada had mounted police in both places. Canadian police were on the streets of Dyea and Skaguay daily and in one of the places Canada had a government office. It was a sort of no man's land, or, rather, a land with a dual government. Disputes were constantly arising. An armed conflict over the enforcement of law or the maintenance of order might arise at any hour.

Therefore, to remove the danger of conflict the modus vivendi was entered into. It provided for a line to be fixed by an officer of the United States Coast Survey and a Canadian astronomer at each of the points at which the disputed country could be entered. Thus, it was not a complete or continuous line from Yukon or Canadian territory on the east to United States territory on the west, but lines indicated by monuments at the White River Pass, the Chilkoot Pass and along the Kleheeni, or Klehini, River and Porcupine Creek, north of the Indian village of Klukwan, these lines only being drawn at places where access could be had into the country beyond. It was to be merely a temporary working boundary for the time being, so that each country should know where it could exercise its authority so long as the arrangement lasted.

In the drawing of this line Canada was put entirely off the Lynn Canal; driven away from Pyramid Harbor, from Dyea and Skaguay. The Indian town of Klukwan, which Canada claimed, was taken in as American territory. Instead of having a tidewater port of entry, Canada was deprived of even canal navigation into the Klondike.

When the extent of concessions made by Canada and the United States is compared, it is discovered that Canada has conceded more than one hundred miles and the United States not more than ten miles, and nothing that the United States has done has vitiated or weakened its claim, which is even now being pressed.

By following the maps which are here presented, a better understanding of the whole situation may be had, and it will be seen that the supposed yielding to Great Britain, which has filled a great many papers, has never existed in fact. It can be stated in perfect safety that there has been no cession of territory to Canada under the provisional boundary which has been laid out, and there is nothing to weaken the claim of the United States until a real boundary is established. The entire trouble seems to arise, as is the case of almost every boundary dispute, from the indefinite way in which the boundaries are first established when the sources of information are few and the maps are crude. As the land becomes more valuable, the lines are more closely defined and a greater determination shown to acquire and hold property than when it is a supposed valueless territory considered inaccessible to settlers.

The attitude of Secretary Hay, who is now conducting the affair in the interests of the Americans, seems to be one of discretion and diplomatic tact mixed with firmness and an intention to hold strictly to his legal rights in the case.

THE WHITE HOUSE.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

The PRESIDENT'S house (officially, the Executive Mansion) is a mile and a half west of the capitol. It is two stories high, one hundred and seventy feet long, eighty-six feet deep and built of freestone. The cornerstone was laid in 1792, the edifice was first occupied by President John Adams in 1800, and the original building was burned by the British army in the summer of 1814; but Congress, in 1815, very promptly authorized its re-construction, by use of the same old walls. This was done, and the present edifice was first occupied in 1818. The original structure was not painted at all; but the new building, which retained the blackened walls left by the torch of the British army, was very unsightly; so, at the instance of General Andrew Jackson, it was painted white, not only to destroy the traces of fire and smoke, but also in defiance of that spirit of vandalism which had sought its destruction in a manner which received condemnation even in the public opinion of England; and it was from the patriotic sentiment of this circumstance, no less than from the color itself, that the Executive Mansion became so universally known among Americans as "the White House."

The Blue-Room is circular, or oval, in form; and, centrally located on the Potomac-side of the White House, it is the handsomest and the most historically interesting as well as the most useful room, perhaps, in the Mansion. It was through the south window of this room that the prostrate form of President Garfield was passed into the Mansion to avoid the immense crowd which gathered in front of it after the fatal shot had been fired. It was in this room that President Cleveland was made the liege-lord and master of the queen of American women. It was in this room that the Cleveland children were christened. It is in this room that the President stands to receive distinguished visitors from other lands; and it is in this room that the Secretary of State formally presents to the President all diplomatic representatives of foreign countries, when they tender their credentials and ask for the official recognition of their ministerial capacities. It takes its name from the distinctive color of its interior decorations, which is a delicate shade of blue. The wall-paper on the walls of this room is not paper at all, but a delicate shade of figured blue silk of the finest texture and quality; and the furniture is upholstered in silk of substantially the same shade and texture.

Of the English colonial type of architecture and always furnished in the same delicate shade, the Blue-Room retains its historic character through each administration; and, since the days of Mrs. John Adams, the first mistress of the White House, it has been the scene of the most interesting ceremonies in WhiteHouse history. The room itself has just been renovated and redecorated; but, while its decorative character was changed and the color-scheme made more harmonious than ever before, it was found possible to utilize many of the former decorations. The room is paneled; and the color-scheme was worked out in harmonious shades of blue, relieved by ivory-white with the slightest possible illumination of gold; while the decorations of the ceiling, which are in relief and composed of conventional scrolls, wreaths and stars, supported at both ends by the decorative escutcheon of the United States, were made to follow the oval shape of the room. So that the ceiling is now an interblend of a blue and grayish white, graduated and diminished toward the center from which depends a magnificent chandelier for electricity or gas, whose light is caught and reflected in countless scintillating prisms.

The cornice, with its egg-and-dart and other enrichments, is made to conceal a row of electric bulbs, which impart a transparent and atmospheric softness to the ceiling light; and the frieze, under the cornice, is in low relief, with an embossed underprint. The treatment of the mediums employed in this composition is, perhaps, unique in decorative art; for, without greatly taxing the imagination, it resembles a lace embroidery, appliqued on fabrics, combining relative shades.

The silk fabric of small patterns, on the walls, is used as a background for panels, at measured intervals around the room; and the frames of these panels are in ivory and gold, while the filling is of blue figured damask, animated and lustrous. Over each panel, is a bracket in Etruscan gold, whose branches carry electric bulbs—evenly distributing the light. The dado is also in low relief, and so treated as to represent a texture harmonious with the design and color-scheme of the room. The top of each panel is finished in two festoons of flowers, starting from a wreath and executed in relief.

The mirrors, resting upon a marble mantel and a gold consol-table, respectively, on opposite sides of the room, are of the English colonial type, with frames of ivory and burnished gold. They help to broaden the prospect and distribute the light evenly; while over the tops of the windows, which are hung with Brussels-lace and over-draperies in plain satin, trimmed with passementeries, are elaborately carved grills.

While the old furniture, which is of uncertain type with a leaning somewhat to the Louis XV period, has been regilded and recovered with the same damask that was formerly used in the panels of the walls, the new carpet, with its plain center and colonial border, adds materially to the tout ensemble of this beautiful room—the general effect of the combinations being such that it is doubtful whether the room has ever been so harmoniously decorated before. But the ornaments, which help to produce this general effect, must not be overlooked. They are neither numerous nor elaborate; but the most conspicuous among them are the four Sevres vases*, which have been presented to the United States by the French Government. Two of these became the property of the United States and formed a part of the permanent interior heirlooms of the White House so long ago that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." The oldest attache of the Mansion found them there when he was appointed by Abraham Lincoln in November, 1864; and the other two are the handsome new ones which have been recently installed.

These two old vases were unquestionably presented to the United States by the French Government. The fact is not only borne out by the tradition running with the vases themselves, but it has been verified repeatedly by the testimony of eminent Frenchmen who have been conducted, as visitors, through the Executive Mansion since 1864. These antique fellows are not so massive as the new ones are, nor are they so rich in simplicity of design, modesty of decoration and integrity of coloring; but they are much more intricate of conception, elaborate of execution and ornate of variety; and, doubtless, were regarded as masterpieces in their day and time. They are arranged upon either end of the table (at the west side of the room), upon which stands the pier-mirror, and they are both hand-painted: the one on the left (facing them) presents a group of several persons, in which Marie Antoinette, robed in white, is the central figure; and the one on the right presents a group of three persons, in which Charlotte Corday, robed in white, is the central figure. These paintings represent scenes from French history.

The two new vases, which have been placed permanently in the Blue Room also (one on each side of the large south window which opens upon a magnificent view of the historic Potomac below), far exceed in elegance anything in the way of porcelain ware ever before placed in the White House; and they are highly characteristic of the artistic taste of the French people. The vases and pedestals together stand about seventy-eight inches high; and the vases themselves which are about thirty-three inches in height, of a deep purple-blue—that famous "bleu de Sevres", with a mosaic of variegated gray tints breaking through the shell of coloring which is so characteristic and distinctive of this famous line of creations in the realm of art; while the pedestals are octagon in shape, white in color and gilded on the edges. They present a majestic appearance and are in happy harmony with the prevailing color of the room to which they are a rich acquisition.

FROM THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

These magnificent specimens of French handiwork were a gracious gift from Felix Faure, late president of the French republic, to the American people (through William McKinley), in commemoration of the opening to public use of the new Franco-American cable (August 17, 1898) when Presidents McKinley and Faure exchanged over this new trans-Atlantic cable the first message between the White House and the Palace of the Elysees, on behalf of the two republics. In massiveness of proportion, dignity of pose, beauty of outline, perfection of finish and lavish richness of coloring, these two vases are exact reproductions, each of the other, with the exception of the inscriptions they bear, which are exactly the same in phraseology but different in language—that on the left vase, as they now stand, being in French, as follows:

FELIX FAURE
President de la Republique Francaise
A William MacKinley
President des Etats Unis D'Amerique

En memoire de l'inauguration
Du Nouveau Cable Franco-American
17 Aout 1898

And that on the right vase, as they now stand, being in English, as follows:

FELIX FAURE
President of the French Republic

*Probably, there is not a single royal palace in the whole of Europe, or in any other part of the civilized world, which does not possess one or more rare specimens of the rich products of this celebrated ceramic factory. And the Executive Mansion, in Washington, is not an exception to this general rule, as it contains a Sevres service set in addition to the four Sevres vases which have been presented to the Government of the United States by the Government of France.

To William MacKinley
President of the United States of America.

In commemoration of the inauguration of the new Franco-American Cable
August 17th 1898.

These inscriptions are engraved upon metallic plates which are attached to the bases of the vases; but the engraver must have been a Scotchman as McKinley is given the Scotch form of Mac.

The notable ceremony which attended the formal presentation of this rich acquisition to the interior decorations of the Executive Mansion took place in the Blue Room thereof, April 8, 1899, in the presence of the French Ambassador and the entire staff of the French Embassy, in Washington, on behalf of the French Government; and of the President, Secretary of State and some of the official staff of the White House, on behalf of the United States. It was made the happy occasion of felicitous exchanges of the international amity and good fellowship between the two greatest republics on earth—the Ambassador making the presentation speech, on behalf of the donors; and the President making the acceptance speech on behalf of the donees.

These two vases will remain in the White House permanently and form a part and parcel of the national souvenirs and curios, bric-a-brac, and notable decorations which have been presented, from time to time, by foreign governments. They belong to the nation and not to the President, personally; for, if they had been intended for the President, it would have required an act of Congress to enable him to accept them.

Men, Women and Things.

CONDUCTED BY JENNIE MELVENE DAVIS.

Occasionally a man may be a Jack at all trades and a master of many. F. Hopkinson Smith seems to have obtained this versatile success, for he has won fame and money as an author, an artist, an engineer and a lecturer. One fellow-worker jestingly stated it: "No matter what you do, Hop Smith does it better." He has been the engineer of some of our best known lighthouses, his novels have been published serially in the leading magazines, he is a popular lecturer, and also one in demand at the great universities, and his pictures sell. Mr. Smith has known the bitterness of poverty and privation, and has walked the streets of New York in search of employment. He found employment in a business house, and his experience has been of practical use to him. It has enabled him to make a great financial success of each and every line of his work. To turn from planning a lighthouse on a dangerous reef to painting a picture, and then to writing novels full of life, action and color, seems to prove that all forms of expression are possible to a rapid thinker. Mr. Smith is particularly well known as an artist, through his pictures of Venice. For the past fourteen years he has spent the summer in Venice. He works out of doors and always finishes a painting in a day. He believes that this is the only way to catch the fleeting impressions of light and color. Personally Mr. Smith is a stout, jolly looking man with an air of genial success and good fellowship that suggest the club man rather than the feverish worker that he really is. He stands on the top rounds of all the ladders he has climbed, and is the wonder of each and every worker who has found it difficult enough to attain success in one line.

A great missionary conference was recently held in New York. One of the most conspicuous and interesting of the delegates was the Rev. C. T. Wilson, M. A., who came as a representative of the Church of England Missionary Society of London. He was born in South Australia, where his father who was a clergyman was working among the colonists. He was sent to England when a child to be educated, but after obtaining his degree the call came for him to go into the mission field. He was sent to Central Africa where he met with many thrilling adventures. Ultimately his companion was killed and Mr. Wilson was left alone in the heart of Africa. He remained there four years and returned to England with the envoys that the King of Unganda sent to the Queen. For three years he was vicar of a quiet little English church. Then came the longing to be sent again into the missionary field. He was gladly accepted and sent to Jerusalem. For the last fourteen years his labors have been largely among Mohammedans. His experience in the two widely contrasted fields made him a most interesting member of the Convention.

Ernest Seton-Thompson is a young man who is making a great reputation for himself as an exponent of the human side of animal life. He has a love for wild animals, every one of whose lives he says is a tragedy. He has written many books and short stories about animals and illustrated them. He has lectured much in New York and has done more than any other great naturalist to awaken a living interest in the "brothers of the forest." He has been in the service of the government of Manitoba and spends weeks and months in the wild land of the west and northwest. He does not make his animals talk like human beings as Kipling does, but he makes human beings for once see things from the animal point of view. His book covers are designed by his wife who is a beautiful woman with talent and sympathy for her husband's work.

The name of "Jennie June" has been familiar to the newspaper readers of forty years past. In 1855 Jennie June became a staff member of Noah's Sunday Times. "Jennie June" was but one of many pen names used by this pioneer newspaper woman. Margaret Maybel, Santanella, Veni Vidi and Evergreen were names often used during the first years of her work, but "Jennie June" appeared most frequently at the end of her contributions, and the other names were finally dropped altogether. The one name has become so widely known, both in England and America, that even her intimate friends think and speak of Mrs. Croly as Jennie June. Her seventieth birthday was recently celebrated, and those who looked at the guest of honor felt that she was really "seventy years young," as one of the speakers expressed it. Mrs. Croly was born in England and has returned to her native home during the summer. She expects to make her home in England for an indefinite period. Mrs. Croly is the originator of the "syndicate letter." Her articles and letters were at first published in five newspapers and this developed the idea of furnishing matter to be used in many papers at the same time. The "Woman's Page," as we know it in modern newspapers, was begun by Mrs Croly in a few columns called "Gossip with and for Ladies" and "Parlor and Sidewalk Gossip." The very titles indicate the change in the way woman is regarded now. Mrs. Croly was assistant editor and dramatic critic of Noah's Sunday Times for five years. For nine years she was on the staff of the New York Times, leaving this position to accept the editorship of the Weekly Illustrated News. This publication became a monthly magazine and Mrs. Croly was connected with it for twenty-seven years. It was an innovation for a woman to engage in journalistic work when 'Jennie June' first pleased the readers of this country. She has lived to see women of this country recognized as necessary elements in journalism. Mrs. Croly has been closely identified with the work of women's clubs. Her gentle face and manner are known to all the club women of the country. Herself a pioneer "New Woman," she has been a living rebuke to those who have made their new found freedom an excuse for aggressive or "mannish manners." "Jennie June" is distinctly feminine in manner. She speaks in a somewhat hesitating fashion, strangely in contrast with the keenness of the thought that prompts the utterance. In 1868, Mrs. Croly organized the first Woman's Club of this country. She called together a number of women interested in art, literature and kindred lines, and suggested the formation of a club. Sorosis was organized with Mrs. Croly as its first president. Mrs. Croly's last book is entitled, "The History of the Woman's Club Movement in America." This book must be read in order to appreciate the force and volume of the movement that has developed from that first club. The Woman's Press Club of New York was founded in 1889 by Mrs. Croly, and she has been the president since that time. The greatest lesson that woman can find in 'Jennie June's' life is in the unaffected simplicity and thorough honesty of a womanly woman. She has won success, she has advanced women, she has originated plans that have changed journalism and broadened the intellectual life of women, but she herself has always seemed the old-fashioned "lady" in the sense in which the word "lady" was used forty years ago. She believes in women even with the capital "W," but all that is ultra strenuous and crass in the evolution of the modern woman is far removed from the personality of 'Jennie June.'

J. Pierpont Morgan is probably the greatest financial power in the United States. It is not that his personal wealth exceeds that of other millionaires, but his business in themanipulation of money; he deals in money and to an unprecedented extent the opinion of this one man controls the financial outlook of this country. Of his personality but little has been known. He shuns publicity as far as he has time to shun anything and hammers relentlessly away at his financial schemes. He inherited a taste for finance from his father. The father was of old New England stock but his business affairs led him to London where in time the firm of J. S. Morgan and Co., became one of the best known and most influential of England's financial institutions. The son received a thorough scholastic education in the English High School of Boston and then in a German University. Through his father's influence young Morgan obtained a position in the Bank of England and in the greatest of all schools of finance he received a thorough learning. He gave years to all the details of desk work and the routine of office and when he was ready to leave he was easily the most thoroughly equipped young man in this greatest of financial centers. He came to New York and became cashier to Duncan, Sherman & Co. It was here that he acquired the reputation for marvelous discernment that has marked his career. His decisions as to the value of a security are instantaneous. His short, quick brusque replies show the hard business sense that has no thought except for the matter on hand. He is brutally frankly, honest, with no velvet over the hand of steel. He makes enemies until they find that his manner is not personal but that all alike are treated to short answers. He relies absolutely on his own opinion. It was while in the employ of "Sherman & Co." that Mr. Morgan began to show the great executive ability that has made him a Money King. Through many changes, Mr. Morgan finally rose to the head of the great firm of Drexel, Morgan & Co. He is constantly consulted by the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to the finances of the nation. It is said that Mr. Morgan frequently calls a meeting of the directors of the company to say "Gentlemen I have decided to do so and so" and then adjourns the meeting at once. It is his own absolute faith in himself that has gone far to make him the man he is. There is a lack of the average weaknesses of humanity about him that seems to put him out of reach. He is a generous man but in his own way and at his own time. It is the mighty force of a dominant personality that has made him proud and respected. He seems to the outside world to have a heart neither for love nor hate but only a keen, unerring brain. J. Pierpont Morgan is a name equal to that of Rothschild.

Sada Yacco is the talented Japanese actress who has been the greatest novelty of the theatrical season in New York. The company of Japanese players is headed by Madame Yacco's husband. He is an actor-manager and playwright. Madame Sada Yacco is regarded as a "New Woman" in Japan. She is the first Japanese actress to play in a theatrical company of men. In Japan the theater companies are exclusively masculine or feminine. Sada Yacco is of a noble and rich family of Tokays. She was educated at a girl's school where she spent four years in the study of Japanese literature and Chinese classics. She determined to become a geisha, as a woman who sings or dances at great entertainments is called in Japan. Her mother was so interested in the drama that she organized a company of women and in this way Sada Yacco received her first dramatic training. She married Mr. Kawakami who is considered the greatest Japanese actor. He has a theater in Tokay and produces Japanese versions of many of our greatest plays including those of Shakespeare. Madame Yacco made a great departure from Japanese tradition when she joined her husband's company. She is amazed and delighted at the freedom enjoyed by the women of this country. She says "I shall never forget how the American women are cherished by the men and when I return to Japan I hope to have at least a little influence in making my countrywomen a more important factor in the life of the nation." An interpreter steps before the curtain and explains the story of the play. In this way the audience are able to follow the work. Madame Yacco is said to be the most beautiful woman of her country. She is short but her hands and feet are not as abnormally small as those of her countrywomen in general. Her features are regular but her eyes are hardly as oblique as the majority of Japanese. Her acting is strong and forceful. Madame Yacco is particularly struck with the power of expressing emotion that is shown in our music and intends to introduce it in her husband's theater in Japan instead of the monotonous Japanese music.

PRICES ON 70,000 THINGS

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO. CHICAGO

The tallest mercantile building in the world. We own and exclusively occupy the buildings shown here. We carry a stock of merchandise valued at $2,500,000, which we sell to out-of-town customers at wholesale prices.

In our buildings we carry merchandise valued at $2,500,000 which we sell only to out-of-town buyers. A general store with a stock of $2,000 is a pretty fair store. Ours would make twelve hundred and fifty such stores. We have two million customers who buy from us by mail. Our buildings have 25 acres of floor space filled with everything for them. We have built such an enormous trade by selling to users at wholesale prices, and by treating people fairly. You would be one of those millions of customers if you knew us and knew our prices.

We have just issued a new catalogue — No. 68 — containing 1,200 pages and 17,000 illustrations — giving prices on 70,000 articles. You will find prices in it on everything you wear or use—on most of the things you eat; and the prices will run from 15 to 50 per cent below the prices of any store around you. We have thousands of customers for whom we save above $100 per year. This book is free to any out-of-town caller at our store, but the book is so large that it costs us almost a dollar to print and mail it. If you will send us 15 cents to pay part of the postage, we will pay the balance that it costs us to make and deliver it. We send it by mail or express prepaid.

Originators of the Catalogue Business

We are the original catalogue house, founded 28 years ago, and we have by honest methods won the confidence of mail order buyers. Our sales exceed the combined sales of all the other mail order houses in the United States, and by buying the most we are able to sell the lowest.

Our sales are so large that we have our own factories in some lines. We own a vehicle factory and an agricultural implement factory. Our cost in such lines is the actual making cost only. The prices on many lines given in our catalogue are lower than dealers pay.

Satisfactory Dealing Those who deal with us know that every article is exactly as we describe it. No false statement—not the slightest exaggeration—ever appears in our catalogue. We do not describe a second grade article as the best grade. We handle no shoddy, no "fire sale" or "bankrupt" stocks.

We Keep Trade We seek trade only to keep it. The profit on your first purchase may not even pay for our catalogue, but a customer once is usually a customer always. There are more than a million people who send every year for our catalogue.

Your Money Back If an error occurs it is pleasantly corrected. If anything is wrong, we remedy it. If goods are not as represented, return them and we will pay transportation on goods both ways.

We Answer Letters There are two thousand people employed by us to serve you; many of them are correspondents ready to answer your letters. Ask us what any goods quoted in our catalogue will cost laid down at your station and we will tell you promptly.

How We Can Sell So Low One thousand average dealers buying together would scarcely buy so much as we. Our orders, therefore, are sought by nearly all manufacturers. The fiercest competition in America centers here. If a maker could sell to a thousand dealers at once, see how much selling expense he would save by it—how much risk and labor. You may be sure that we get all the saving for you. We sell on a very small margin of profit. The average dealer needs to add to his cost from two to five times as much. The expense of our business is apportioned on sales of over twelve million dollars annually. In these ways we save you from 15 to 50 per cent. When you see our catalogue you will not wonder that we do so great a business. The marvel is that everybody living away from large cities doesn't buy everything from us. We don't pay postmasters, express agents or banks a commission on money orders issued in our favor.

The Fungus Growth of Trees.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

BOOKS have been written upon the mushroom growth from the earth, edible and non-edible, while the mushroom growth upon the decaying wood with its beautiful fan shaped forms remain practically unnoticed. These parasite growths have a mission as well as the edible mushroom. Their under surface in quality and texture resembles white velvet, while the upper surface which we call the back of the mushroom, is always brown and with distinct waves. It is comparatively tough and hard, and will support quite a weight. Thus nature protects these parasite growths from being injured by the cony that may run over them, or the partridge that inhabits the wild woods with her young.

These fan shaped formations have a very creamy and sensitive under surface, covered with a net work of pores, and when these pores are manipulated they bleed, that is, the steel starts sap which lies within the second layer, which is always of a brown color, and this pigment of nature flows upon the face of nature's canvass, producing a picture resembling sepia. The white, creamy surface forms a back ground. One must use great care in making the drawing. If the steel makes a false mark, no power can correct it. The first stroke must be right, or your sketch is spoiled. If you intended to make a straight line, and the hand trembled, producing a zigzag, it must remain crooked.

If the mushroom has cork within its surface, one must use the steel with great care; it requires a practiced hand to keep the values.

The little bit of nature that heads the column, was found upon a fallen log by the road side. When one finds a reliable mushroom, the first consideration, is what can fit into the length and breadth the best, that is, what sketch of nature, for nothing but a landscape is in harmony with the fungi. The home of Burns appealed to the engraver, as he is called nature's poet. She dedicated this little bit of nature to Scotia's bard, who sang of "the mountain and daisy" and "Rank is but the guinea's stamp; a man's a man for a' that." Who has not shed a tear over his blighted, saddened life!

Upon a double formation I fitted in "the Profile of the Old Man of the Mountain," Franconia notch. In the rear mushroom, the scene represents Winnepesaugee Lake, New Hampshire. This lovely cryptogam grew upon a large yellow birch stump, which once supported a lordly tree. This shattered stump from year to year throws out these puzzles of nature, which are fed by a mountain brook. (Mt. Monadnock.) While they are forming in shape and beauty, silently, steadily, drinking in oxygen like the animal life, this mountain brook, as it chatters over the rounded pebbles, fills the air with the music of "Men may come and men may go, but I go on forever." This growth of fungi has many phases. When we have found one perfect in anatomy, we have found a prize, for it can never be duplicated. Nature never repeats itself. The commonest things of earth confound the wise.

A regal mushroom was found in a valley of fallen trees near the home of "Joshua Whitcomb." As you look down from the Sullivan hills of New Hampshire, you will see the summer home of the renowned Swanzy actor, whose kindness among his home family has won respect from all his personal friends. "The Whittier oak," upon one specimen, stands near Center Harbor, New Hampshire. This town was one of the summer homes of the Quaker poet. One can see his favorite tree as they sail up the Winnepesaugee Lake and can imagine this gifted writer sitting under the waving branches of this regal oak, (fit for a Kousseau to paint) writing pathetically of the tribe who once inhabited these shores, and launched their birch canoes into the wonderful Killarney of America. No one with keen perception can look upon the decaying wood and not say, "How tenacious of life." There is a divinity within these fan-shaped formations. They are not lifeless. One cannot see the beauty and character of the dead wood without a glass. All up and down a fallen stump, the parasite growth is wonderfully beautiful.

The fan-shaped formations I call the Royalists; those in rosette form with their binding of brown and light green I call the butler, and housekeeper, of the Royalists; and the cup-like in shape, pert and erect, with a bind of brown, and a ring of creamy white I call the cup bearers, and minor servants, of the household; then there is a formation with a brown cap; a stem supports the velvet cap which is soft and plastic like the cap—these we will call the errand boys. After studying these wonderful growths, one can never be lonely in a pathless-woods, and a child whose attention is called to the worthless formations will never kick them about, but on the contrary will gather them in their baskets and wonder if the good God who made them also made these daintinesses of Nature! And the farmer who has noticed these toadstools, as he calls them, will find a double charm when he comes to a realization that within these growths there is a storehouse of sap, which, if rightly used, will make a picture that will allure and fascinate the most fastidious of artists.

The farmer's wife is always ready to take a walk, (after the daily drudgery is finished), or a drive with old Ned through the forest road. With those common people (as the world calls them) I rode miles and miles, never fearing tramps, for old dog Tray is ever faithful; I always feel secure, for I manage if possible to have one of these dogs for a companion. The farmers' wives have a strong hand and can manage a refractory horse with perfect ease. I love these people with their bright happy children, and I find wherever I go they remember me, and are watching some fallen log or shattered stump for my benefit. From their observation I have been able to learn many facts as regards the fungus growth of trees. And I would advise young and old to cultivate a love for the common things of nature for they have a tendency to make life more attractive, and they also teach us there is a divinity, the germ of an angel in every human soul however depraved. For we are His children and the sheep of His pasture. Nature was made for our benefit and no wayside flower, or flowers in deep ravines out of sight of human eyes were made in vain. There is an invisible intelligence that enjoys them.

I would say to my readers; do not expect great results, that is do not expect to reproduce perfect pictures at once. You may have to try several times before your work is presentable; no matter if you do spoil several formations, there are other growths to be found for the forests are full of old stumps of trees and fallen logs. Dentists' tools are nice to use and they can readily be obtained. They are exceedingly nice in outlining a picture. I had a set given me when I started out; a dentist had used them, producing groans and pains almost unendurable upon the human family. Yet they proved very useful in working out very beautiful and dainty pictures, from the mushrooms that have been the delight of many homes, for these pictures are Nature's pictures; there is no paint used except that which is worked up from the second layer of the finger which bears a strong resemblance to sepia. Notwithstanding they are pictures produced from nature, people will persist in calling them sepia paintings. Gather a mushroom which has sap within its growth, take a pointed steel and commence your drawing of the picture you wish to reproduce, just as you would work out a picture on paper with a pencil. One can see what can be done the moment they strike the steel into the formation. I have endeavored to make my description of the work explicit and would say in closing, if at once you don't succeed, try, try again. Remembering the prayer of the little girl who prayed to God, that "if at first you don't succeed to make me a dood little girl dear, Good Dod, why please try, try again."

WOOD is used wholly in the construction of the sabot, or shoe worn by the peasants in the northern countries of Europe—also of the Siamese shoe, which has the form of an ancient canoe, with a gondola bow and an open toe. The Portuguese shoe has a wooden sole and heel, with the vamp made of patent leather. The Persian footgear is often a foot high, and is made of light, delicate wood richly inlaid, having a strap extending over the instep. The sandal worn by the Egyptians is composed of a sole made by pasting together three or four thicknesses of leather; this is held to the foot by passing a band across the instep and between the great and next toes. Sandals are usually beautifully embroidered.

$2000 IN CASH FREE!

Last January, February, and March it will be remembered we advertised what was at that time considered one of the biggest contests ever published. The first prize was nothing more nor less than $5 a week for life, or an annuity of $250 a year in advance. Mr. A. W. Madden of Phillipsburg, N. J., was declared the winner, and as Mr. Madden preferred the annuity of $250 a year in advance, a certified check for the said amount was promptly forwarded to him. Just stop and think for a moment what a grand prize this was. It meant that as long as Mr. Madden lived he would receive from us every year on the first day of May $250 in cash. As Mr. Madden is only 27 years old he has a good many years before him in which to enjoy his good fortune.

Now if you were so foolish as to ignore our previous advertisement, we certainly would advise you not to overlook this one, for without a doubt this is the opportunity of your life, for you not only have a chance to win an income of $300 a year for life, but also to win a large amount of ready cash. We want you to read this over very carefully for it does not cost you one cent. One of these contests is, we believe, a very hard one, in fact, so hard that it cannot be solved in a minute, nor an hour, but is going to tax your brains and take considerable of your time. However, do not give it up, for it can be solved, and just think of the reward. We will give $2,000 in cash for the correct answer. In the block square to the left we have printed 16 jumbled letters which we want you to try and arrange. These jumbled letters when properly arranged will spell the names of three large cities in the world. One city being located in the United States, one in South America and one in Europe. In making the names of these three cities the letters can only be used as many times as they appear, and no letter can be used which does not appear. When you have found the three correct names you will have used every letter in the sixteen as many times as it appears. If you cannot find the three correct names but find only two you will receive a special prize worth $1. Remember if you find only two correct names you will have the same chance to win the income for life or one of the big cash prizes mentioned in the second half of this advertisement. If you send in your answer at once we are quite sure you will not be disappointed. Some one is going to win the money and it may be you. Anyway, it does not cost you any money to try and if you are a successful contestant there is only one easy condition, which will take less than half an hour of your time, and which we will write you as soon as your answer is received. This, we can truthfully say, is the very hardest puzzle ever advertised, so get out your geography, atlas or encyclopedia and look for these three cities. The correct names are known only to the president of this company and his private secretary. The envelope containing the three names has been sealed and deposited with a leading Safe Deposit Co. in Boston and will not be opened until the day after the contest closes. This, we believe is the only honest way of conducting a contest, as everyone will have an equal chance. In the event of more than one correct answer being received, we will request five parties who have answered this advertisement to act as a committee to award the cash pro rata. They will be invited to come to Boston at our expense and be our guests while in this city. We take this unusual method of selecting a committee to show our good faith as we want to treat all in the fairest manner possible. The committee will be selected from among the contestants ten days before the contest closes, and you may be asked but not compelled to act as one of the committee. In addition to the Two Thousand Dollars in Cash we will give you an opportunity to win

WITHOUT LABOR OR EXPENSE.

We are going to give to some one who has entered this contest and who complies with the conditions as stated above, an apportunity to win and secure from us without any labor or expense on their part, Three Hundred Dollars every year during their natural life. We mean just what we say. If you are the lucky one, and we hope you are, for some one will get it, we will send the winner every year during their natural life $300 cash in advance. Now, in addition to the cash prizes already mentioned we are going to give away nine cash prizes of $250 each and fifty-eight cash prizes of $25 in the following manner: We will give $250 to one party residing in the New England States which consist of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. $250 to one party residing in the Middle States which consist of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and District of Columbia. $250 to one party residing in the Central States which consist of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. $250 to one party residing in the Western States which consist of Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, and North and South Dakota. $250 to one party residing in the Southern States which consist of Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky. $250 to one party residing in the Southwestern States which consist of Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico and Arizona. $250 to one party residing in the Rocky Mountain States which consist of Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Idaho and Utah. $250 to one party residing in the Pacific Coast States which consist of California, Nevada, Oregon and Washington, and $250 to one party residing in the Dominion of Canada, and that is not all, for we will give to one party residing in each State and territory in the United States and in each province of the Dominion of Canada a cash prize of $25. We mean just what we say. You have an opportunity to win and secure from us, without any labor or one cent of expense on your part, any of the above named prizes. There is positively no deception, and as for trickery, how can there be, when the committee is selected from the contestants, and you yourself might be chosen to decide who the winners are.

Do not throw this contest aside and say, Oh, pshaw! I have answered puzzles before and never got anything; for if you do you will regret it as long as you live. Some one is going to win the money, and it may be you, no one can tell. Anyway, it does not cost you one cent as we do not want any money from you. Are the prizes worth trying for? We think they are, for $300 a year paid to you for life will keep one from the poor-house and to those who have a small income it will supply them with many a necessity which one has to do without in these hard times. Do you know of any firm in the world that has made such liberal offers in such a fair manner? Of course we are strangers to you, and you have no assurance except our word that we are financially able to carry out the promise we make. If you have the least doubt, we would be pleased to have you get a special report from either Bradstreet's or Dun's Mercantile Agency, or our bankers. We are a responsible company with a paid-up capital of One Hundred Thousand Dollars, composed of well-known business men, and our sole object in giving away such large cash prizes is to advertise our business and we will leave no stone unturned to accomplish, by honest methods only, our object. Everyone entering this contest will receive honest treatment, and you will have the same chance whether you live in California, Mexico, Canada or Massachusetts — distance makes no difference. When you have carefully arranged the jumbled letters into the three names which you think are right, send your answer to us at once and enclose a stamp for reply. Within a few days you will receive an answer telling you whether you are a successful contestant, and we will also send you full particulars regarding our other contest whereby you can win for one moment's thought, without any labor or expense, either $300 a year for life or a large cash prize. Do not delay, as this advertisement may never appear in this publication again. Address us this way:

The New American Ambassador to Italy.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

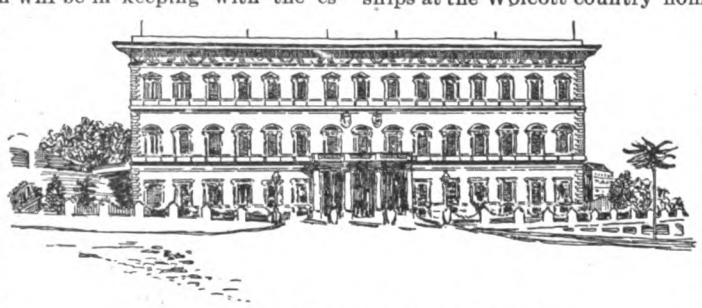
THOSE who have been so fortunate as to know the new American ambassador to Italy, Hon. Roger Wolcott, and his wife, Mrs. Edith Prescott Wolcott, know that they will represent the United States at Rome with a degree of dignity, grace and discretion which will never have been surpassed by any representatives of this country abroad.

It was my privilege to meet Ambassador Wolcott frequently, while he was governor of Massachusetts, and the more I saw of him the more I admired and respected him, both as a man and as a public official.

Roger Wolcott was born in Boston, in 1847. He had an ancestor by the same name who was second in command in the expedition which Sir William Pepperell made against Cape Breton in 1745, which resulted in the capture of Louisburg. Another ancestor, Oliver Wolcott, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and fought in the Revolutionary army against Burgoyne. Both of these men became governors of Connecticut.

Mr. Wolcott graduated from Harvard College in 1870. His standing in his classes was high, and he was the choice for class orator. After graduation he worked as a tutor at Harvard for two years, at the same time taking the course in the Harvard Law School. He was admitted to the Suffolk bar in 1874.

Mr. Wolcott's public career began as a member of the Boston Common Council, where he served three years. He was then elected to the Legislature, where he also served three years. From the very first he evinced qualities which made him a leader in whatever political field he entered. He was elected lieutenant governor, when Greenhalge was governor, and re-elected. When Governor Greenhalge died in office, Mr. Wolcott succeeded him for the unexpired term of office, and was then elected governor for two more terms. He is an easy, practiced public speaker.



The following description of the new ambassador's personal appearance is quoted from one of the Boston daily papers: "Governor Wolcott is tall and gracefully proportioned, his height being over six feet. His head is small and elegantly poised, and his features are classical and refined. His hair is prematurely silvered, but his clear, wholesome complexion makes him look much less than his real age, in spite of his hair. Dignified and polite at all times Mr. Wolcott can assume an air of force, but it is the force of decision and not of sternness. What commends Mr. Wolcott to the public is not alone his oratory, but also the knowledge, which everybody possesses, that his character is unblemished and his aims high."

I happen to know that the frequent references in print to Governor Wolcott's personal appearance were extremely annoying to him. Over and over again he intimated this to the newspaper men, and would have done so more emphatically than he did if his modesty had not made any reference to the matter so repugnant to him. It was only the fact that he realized that as a public official he belonged, in a measure, to the people, which made him tolerate it at all. So far as the newspaper men are concerned, Governor Wolcott had such a striking presence and such a delightful personality that they simply could not help expressing their admiration for him.

I shall always remember one time in particular when I saw him. It was at a great dinner which had been given to the Secretary of the United States Treasury and a company of distinguished congressmen. The lofty apartment in which the tables were spread was the most perfectly appointed banquet hall in Boston, and palms and flowers added to the beauty of the furnishings.

The governor's chair was placed so that when he rose to welcome the guests from Washington to Boston, he stood before a lofty window whose draperies of rich dark red velvet had been drawn together in loose folds which swept from the ceiling to the floor. His picture, as he stood there for a moment, waiting for the room to become quiet, will always be painted on my mind. It was a picture in which to the beauty and grace of some aristocratic ancestral portrait there had been added the simple dignity of an honest American man.

The Wolcotts are fortunate in having sufficient wealth so that, like Ambassador and Mrs. Draper, who preceded them to Rome, they can maintain the American embassy in that city in a style which will be in keeping with the establishments of the other diplomats there, a style which demands an expenditure of money far in excess of the salary which the United States allows its ambassadors. They will occupy the same beautiful palace which Mr. and Mrs. Draper occupied.

RESIDENCE OF U. S. AMBASSADOR TO ITALY.

So much of the success of an embassy in a city like Rome depends upon its social functions, that the aid which the ambassador's wife can afford him is very great. Mrs. Draper was a beautiful woman, noted for grace and tact. Mrs. Wolcott will be her worthy successor.

Mrs. Wolcott was Miss Edith Prescott, a granddaughter of Colonel William Prescott who commanded at the battle of Bunker Hill. It is hard for any one who sees Mrs. Wolcott to believe that she was married so long ago as in

OFFICE OF AMERICAN EMBASSY IN ROME.

1874, and that she has five children, the eldest a son who graduated from Harvard several years ago.

Just as I have one recollection of Governor Wolcott which is particularly attractive to me, I have one of his wife also. For a great deal of the time while her husband was Governor of Massachusetts, Mrs. Wolcott was in mourning for her father, and on this account went little into society, but one fall when the White Squadron was in Boston Harbor I remember the Wolcotts gave a reception to the officers of the various ships at the Wolcott country home, in Milton. A great many distinguished guests were present, among them I remember, being Thomas Bailey Aldrich, the writer.

The Wolcott home in Milton has long been famous among the country homes around Boston, both for the great size of the estate, two hundred acres or more, and for the beauty of the location. The company on this occasion was an unusually brilliant one to look at, because, in addition to the beautiful gowns which the women wore, the naval officers and the members of the Governor's Staff who were present were all in full dress uniform, and the gorgeous display of gold braids and lacings which the uniforms afforded added a note of richness to the coloring which American social functions do not often have.

Mrs. Wolcott is a woman in whose face there is added to the beauty of feature that charm which comes from true kindliness of heart. She is rather above medium height, and of unusually graceful carriage. On the evening of the reception to the officers of the squadron she met her guests standing beneath an arch between the great hall and the drawing-room. She wore a gown of heavy black silk, made severely plain except for soft folds of black chiffon on the shoulders and about the low cut bodice. Fastened at one side was a huge cluster of purple violets in a setting of their own soft green leaves. Around her neck was a long rope of superb pearls. I thought then, and I have thought ever since, that she was the most beautiful woman I have ever seen.

IF people knew what an easy task it is to clean portraits they would never allow them to continue in the condition in which so many oil paintings are seen on the walls of houses.

First take the picture from its frame and lay it upon a table, face upwards. Peel a large potato and cut it in halves; then wet a sponge in warm water and go carefully over the entire surface of the picture, being careful, however, if there are any cracks in the surface, not to let any water get into it. Then take the potato, and with the smooth side go over the surface while it is wet; do not rub hard, but rub evenly and firmly until there is a sort of lather all over the surface; the dirt will soon begin to soften and the dirt will disappear, when it should be carefully washed with fresh tepid water.

Sometimes the dirt has been varnished over, when of course it cannot be reached and removed in this way. In a case of this kind, take a heavy blanket, double it twice and sprinkle freely with alcohol; then turn the picture, face downward, over it; of course the picture is still in its frame, for this treatment. The fumes of the alcohol will soon begin to rise and loosen the dirt; the picture should be kept over the alcohol until the spots have disappeared from the surface. It should then be sponged with tepid water and placed where it will dry slowly. Never use soap on an oil painting. After a picture has been cleaned it should be varnished with picture varnish, with a bristle brush.

A CURIOUS wedding took place recently in the West, in one of the rich German families. During the first part of the ceremony the bride stood in a ring made by the bridesmaids, who held in their hands a rope of flowers. When the time came for the putting on of the wedding ring, the bride broke through the flower rope and joined the bridegroom, this being an old custom in the country parts of Germany, and typifies the leaving of girlhood behind.

What will be the effect of the recent Chinese uprising and Missionary work in China, is a question that many are now eagerly asking.

In spite of this being the year of our Presidential election there is every indication of a great fall business. People have learned that it is possible to save the country without neglecting their business affairs.

"If War and rumors of War" must immediately precede the Millennium, surely that period of blissful serenity must be at hand. Never within the memory of men and women now living were there so many wars in progress and wars in prospect.

The withering hand of the Census taker has again been laid on many prosperous and populous cities and towns. It is amazing how a place grows in the estimation of the people after the census has been taken and how it falls behind when the next count is made. You can get consolation from the fact that the rival town suffered in just the same way.

No greater change has taken place in the last decade than in the manner of country living. There has been a steady outpouring of wealthy city people towards the country. Summer homes have sprung up all over the land. The best ideas in architecture, sanitation and comfort have been a perpetual object lesson for the entire sections in which they stand. The farmhouses built to-day do not have the barns placed directly across the road shutting out all view of hill, meadow and woodland. The idea has spread that living may be easier if a little beauty is added to the old idea of utility. There is no more independent life in the world than that of a farmer. With the ordinary comforts and conveniences incident to city life made use of as far as possible in a country home, the ideal way of living would be attained. The recent plans to extend the delivery of mail to rural districts brings one more convenience of town life to the country.

Wolves are supposed to belong to the pioneer stage of civilization in a country. Our preconcieved ideas on this topic demand revision when we read the last report of the French Ministry of Agriculture. During the past year, 207 wolves were killed in France and 13,000 francs were paid in bounties. Not one of the wolves were found in the mountainous districts near the Alps and Pyrenees but the larger number was found in the central department of France. Since 1882, 8866 wolves have been destroyed in France. Once during the last twelve years and but once has a wolf been known to attack a person. The rapid extinction of wild animals in our own country seems unprecedented when we read such a report from as old a country as France and one whose area is so small compared to ours. With us the most stringent laws hardly avail to protect the game animals, many of which, like the buffalo, are practically extinct. Animals harmful to man have been pursued until the killing of a wolf, bear or panther is startling news.

There is no doubt that the American people enjoy the hustling and howling and hurrying of political campaign. Even those who can not hope to win seem to enter the contest with spirit and enthusiasm for the mere joy of the working. The Prohibition party polled a smaller vote in the last Presidential election than it had drawn in many years. It still holds in its ranks thousands of earnest adherents who believe that a vote for conscience's sake is never lost even though they have no hope of electing their candidate. This month a Prohibition campaign train will start on a tour of the country from Maine to California. All the train hands from conductor to brakeman are sworn to "touch not, taste not, handle not" any intoxicating drink. A male quartette will furnish music. The train will be elaborately decorated with prohibition mottoes and the emblem of the party—an inverted army canteen—will be conspicuously displayed. The Prohibition candidate for President and Vice President will make speeches from the rear platform at every place where the train halts. Every town that can raise $100 will be visited.

We are engaged as a people in the work of a Presidential campaign and in a way that a foreigner would find it hard to comprehend. Reading our constitution he would learn that each state selects a given number of competent citizens every four years to elect a President of the United States. He would further learn that these citizens so selected and called electors are to meet at the various state capitals where each will cast his vote for some statesman for President of the United States and for another statesman for Vice President. These votes so cast by the electors of each state are sealed and transmitted to Washington by private messengers and are delivered to the President of the Senate by whom they must be opened and read in the session of the Senate and that the person having a majority of the votes cast for President shall be declared duly elected to fill that office, and the one having received a majority of votes for Vice President shall in like manner be declared duly elected to the office of Vice President of the United States. He would not find a word in our constitution about a Presidential election by the people and naturally he would wonder what all this rumpus is about.

The women aren't saying anything. They are just indulging in a little quiet comfortable retrospection over the trials and triumphs the shirtwaist man has lived through during the past summer. They have watched his troubled progress through the camps and courts and schools. With an amused yet sympathetic interest they have seen him turned out of the restaurants where he was erstwhile monarch of all he surveyed. They have seen the street gamin follow in his wake and comment upon his appearance in the terse yet picturesque English which the genus usually reserves for female victims. They have read the curt assertions of the young man who claims in an aggressive manner that he is the real and only first reformer of the garb of down trodden man. This original reformer modestly allows that Winston Churchill introduced the shirtwaist in England but the reformer asserts with circumstantial detail that he wore the first shirtwaist of America upon the boardwalk in Atlantic City in May. Inscribe it upon his tombstone and after time shall have mellowed the deed let the American people claim for him a place in the Hall of Fame and write his name upon the tablet with other American philanthropists. When the legislatures of our sovereign commonwealths shall convene we may see them rest from their mighty struggles for legislation on the hat pin, the theater hat, the Mother Hubbard and the short skirt, and determine by statute the legal right of the shirtwaist man.

Poor old Shakespeare never would have said "What's in a name?" if he could have glanced down the list that America furnishes. The unearned and unasked cognomens that some unfortunates have to drag through life are just occasions for both tears and temper. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals might wisely expend some of its revenue on a series of tracts to parents and parents by proxy who burden children with names that would disgrace a tombstone. It is not necessary to prove the truth of this assertion by illustration of the names bestowed upon helpless infants by mature persons who bestow absurd names from a mistaken sense of humor, or long drawn out ancient ones from a Chinese-like worship of ancestors. When we consider the infinite labor and endless discussion necessary in order to name even a small family, we can slightly appreciate the task of those in charge of the great public institutions where the waifs of a great city, nameless and homeless, are gathered. During the recent summer either humor or helplessness bestowed some ridiculously significant names upon the waifs of New York. A little pickaninny who claimed the city's hospitality upon one hot day, must tread the weary path of life with the name of Virginia Broiler. Joseph July and Susan Sweat received a local habitation and a name during the same hot spell, but Rebecca Wet succeeded in finding a change in the weather. The Commissioner of Charities by this time began to "take notice" and the frivolous sponsors were directed to use the city directory for future supply of names. "What's in a name"—indeed.

We American people are plain people and our constitution forbids the granting of any title of nobility. But human nature is much the same the world over whether it be under a monarch or a republic. We can't help feeling that a handle or a tail on a name distinguishes its owner from the common herd. Captains, Majors, Colonels and even Generals are not all required to show their commissions. What man who has served a term in his state legislature ever after omits the "Hon?" Judges are not quite so plentiful but they are with us by courtesy and by right. There is one man though who feels that he is moved by no sense of foolish pride but by a solid and sober appreciation of his position in the community—that is the man who always adds an "Esq." to his name. No vain military flourish or political pomp and vanity for him. Esquire! Now all unconsciously the "esquire" man is the chief sinner of the title grabbing mob. Esquire is an old English title which a very few Englishmen are lawfully entitled to bear. It was granted by letters patent from the crown. It is not possible for any American to use the term correctly or legally. Poor John Smith Esq. He might be an American judge or colonel or honorable but never an esquire. We are reminded of the French courtiers who thoughtlessly used the expression "The late king" in reference to the defunct ruler of Spain. "What is that?" sharply demanded his majesty of France in whose presence death was a forbidden word. "Oh, only a title the kings of Spain assume" said the quick witted nobles. How many titles the uncrowned kings of Yankeeland assume!

WORDS AND MUSIC BY JEAN McDONALD.

ABOUT PADEREWSKI.

Of all the foreigners who have carried away American gold none have inspired so much interest as Ignace Paderewski. His romantic air and hair and the story of his devotion to his wife, who died for lack of necessaries just as he was attaining fortune, and his personal traits have caused him to be the idol of matinee girls and almost the contempt of men. Much of the glamour was dispelled when he came to this country last year as a married man again and some of the sickly sentimentalism and gush was not in evidence as much as usual. Newspaper reports say that Paderewski missed this adulation to such an extent that he went away in high dudgeon, but carrying the usual amount of American dollars.

Notwithstanding his vanities and mannerisms, there can be no doubt of his ability as an artist and whatever he does is of interest to all musical people, who will learn by this writing that Paderewski has no intention of returning to America this year. He will be in Dresden until November arranging with Herr von Schuch the production of his forthcoming opera at the famous Royal Opera House in that city. After its run in Dresden it is intended to bring out the same opera in a number of the continental cities and eventually in England and America.

Speaking of the good American dollars, such profits as Paderewski made in his last American season are not only phenomenal but are not possible for a pianist only once in a while, and at intervals of several years. It must be remembered that his previous trip to this country and his many newspaper friends had given him the best of advertising; and that he could not have that advantage now. In fact, it would be out of the question for him to repeat now the very successful tour he then made.

Now the trip last made was a serious disappointment to the pianist and his friends and far failed of reaching the expectations they had seriously formed of his triumph and the material benefits that he would receive. These visions founded on the results of the past were not destined to be fulfilled; but notwithstanding the tour produced an ample fortune for the artist.

SOUSA'S FAMOUS BAND.

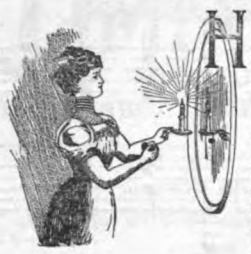
There was a time when it was the proper thing in Europe to believe that "Nothing good could come out of Nazareth." That is, that everything American must be crude and poor, but our Spanish war and the events in which America has taken part in the last two years have called so much attention to us and our ways that we are really receiving the greatest attention ever given us. Nothing can better illustrate this than the recent triumphal tour through Europe by Sousa's band. In every large city they were received with enthusiasm, especially in Paris, where the band was recipient of what might be called an international ovation at the exposition.

Throughout Europe they were received by the highly educated musical people as one of the best aggregations the world has ever seen, and flags, medals and honors came to them unceasingly. One of the remarkable features of the tour was the immediate popularity of American "rag time" music with every nation. The calls for it were constant, and its popularity was only exceeded by the spirited playing of Sousa's own incomparable two-steps.

After a tour which was not only a triumph in itself but full of delight to the members, the band returned to New York last month, to the delight of that city, which felt that it shared in her favorite's success.

A RARE CHANCE FOR ALL.

Whenever one purchases sheet music it naturally occurs to the buyer that the price as compared with other printed matter seems unusually high. This being true now how much more so was it a few years ago when all music was at least forty cents and much of it cost a dollar. Though this is still true in a measure now as a rule the price is more moderate and largely because COMFORT and a few leaders depending on rapid machinery and modern methods, and seeing the great field for cheaper music, solved the problem for the people.



It is like every other business proposition: The larger your capacity and production, the cheaper you can produce and sell. Therefore by issuing in modern way and in vast quantities COMFORT can sell music cheaper than the ordinary publisher could even print it. It is not to make profit on the music but to introduce COMFORT into every home that we offer music practically at cost of mailing. If you want popular full-size sheet music such as you pay all the way from twenty-five cents to a dollar for at stores, for about cost of mailing turn to our music offer and take advantage of the wonderful bargains there.

CHINESE WAR MUSIC.

Every nation has music peculiar to itself and one of our soldiers in China recently wrote COMFORT of the peculiarities of martial music in that country. The chief instrument of a village military band was an immense copper drum about four feet high hung on stakes. Upon this two soldiers beat furiously while other members of the band beat gongs, cymbals and drums, and others blew upon pipes. What our correspondent heard was the Chinese call to arms and is described as noisy as it was lacking in harmony; but it brought up the Imperial Soldiers.

HALLOWE'EN.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

HALLOWE'EN, the last night in October, has been celebrated from time immemorial. At some of the American colleges for women it is customary to celebrate Hallowe'en with straw rides, games and an annual sheet and pillow-case party, where the illuminations are grotesque pumpkins containing candles, and where cakes containing mystic rings, beans and a coin are served with the refreshments.

Many young girls fill the mouth with water on Hallowe'en and walk or run around the block, being careful not to swallow the water or suffer it to escape from the mouth. If a girl succeeds in doing this the first man met on returning home will be her husband.

To ascertain one's standing with a sweetheart, select at random an apple and quarter it, carefully gathering the seeds from the core. According to the number found the following formula is used: 1, I love; 2, I love; 3, I love, I say; 4, I love with all my heart; 5, I cast away; 6, He loves; 7, She loves; 8, They both love; 9, He comes; 10, He tarries; 11, He courts; 12, He marries; 13, Honor; 14, Riches.

The future is sometimes prognosticated on Hallowe'en by candle omens. If a candle burns with an azure tint it signifies the presence or near approach of a spirit or gnome. A collection of tallow rising against the candlewick is styled a winding sheet, and is deemed an omen of death in the family. A spark at the candle denotes that the observer will shortly receive a letter.

Two cambric needles are named on Hallowe'en and skillfully placed in a vessel of water. If they float, swimming side by side, the course of true love runs smooth for those they represent. If they sink both together, or if one sinks and the other floats, the persons named will not marry each other.

A printed alphabet is cut into its individual letters which are placed in water face downward. On the morrow the initial letters of the favored opposite will be found reversed.

Peel an apple so that the skin remains in unbroken sequence. Whirl this skin three times around the head so that when released it passes over the left shoulder and falls to the floor, assuming the initial of the chosen one's name.

To the old Scotch Hallowe'en superstitions there have been added other formerly unattached superstitions, until it is now difficult, if not impossible, to trace whence came many of the observances that mark the closing day of October. In certain parts of the world the old Druid fires are still lit on Hallowmas Eve, but without knowing that the surviving custom is a relic of paganism. In Ireland, as well as in Scotland and Scandinavia, Hallowe'en observances are current, one of them being the ceremony of the making of the dumbcake. Several young women should each take a handful of wheaten flour and add water and salt to make a dough, which should be kneaded by them with their left thumbs, unbroken silence being maintained by all the company. Each one must then roll her cake up and spread it thin and broad, marking on it with a large new pin the initials of her name. The several cakes are then set before the fire, and each cake maker sits quietly in a chair as far removed from the cakes as the room will permit. This must all be done soon after eleven o'clock at night, and between that time and twelve o'clock each person turns her cake once, and a few minutes after midnight the husband of one who is to be first married will appear and lay his hand on the part of the cake marked as aforesaid. A supplement to the dumbcake ceremony will show the occupation of a girl's future lord and master. This consists in melting a quantity of lead and in pouring the molten metal carefully through a symbolic brass key into cold water. The shape assumed by the resultant metal mass indicates the trade, business or profession of the longed-for knight.

The matter of occupation or social state is also determined by taking a walnut, a hazelnut and a nutmeg, and grating them well together. Mix them with butter and sugar, and of the plastic mass make small pills, of which exactly nine, no more and no less, must be taken on retiring. If a maiden dreams of riches she will marry a wealthy man; of white linen, a clergyman; of darkness, a lawyer; of odd noises and tumults, a tradesman; of thunder and lightning, a soldier or sailor; and of rain, a servant.

An interesting Hallowe'en divination that solves matrimonial doubt and banishes uncertainty is accomplished by arranging three dishes upon the hearth. Into the first is put clean water, into the second clouded or muddy water, while the third is left empty. The candidate is securely blindfolded and led to the hearth where the dishes are. The left hand is dipped and if by chance it be in the clean water, the wife that is to be will come to the bar of matrimony a young maid; if in the muddy water, an old maid, but if in the empty dish, it foretells with equal certainty no marriage at all. This ceremony is three times repeated, the arrangement of the dishes being each time changed.

The first ceremony of Hallowe'en among the Scotch is the pulling of a stock or plant of kail. All the company go out and with closed eyes each pulls the first plant of this kind he or she is able to lay hold of. Its being little or big, straight or crooked is prophetic of the size and shape and other characteristics of the grand object of all the Hallowe'en spells—the husband or wife. If any earth remains clinging to the root, that signifies fortune, and the state of the heart of the stem, as perceptible to the taste, is indicative of the natural temper and disposition of a future spouse.

Burning nuts is a famous Caledonian charm. Two hazel nuts, sacred to witches, one bearing the name of the lad and the other the lass, are laid in the fire, side by side, and according as they burn quietly together or start away from one another, so will be the progress and issue of the courtship.

Certain forms must be observed to insure the success of a given spell, and in the following one there must be no departure from the formula: A maiden should steal out, entirely alone, to the kiln, and throw into the pot a ball of blue yarn, holding fast to the end. She should then begin winding the yarn until it resists, whereupon she should demand, "Who holds this yarn?" An answer will be returned from the kilnpot, naming the Christian and surname of her future spouse.

Another test is for her to take a candle, and, going alone, by its light only, stand before a mirror and eat an apple. Some traditions say one should comb one's hair instead of eating the apple. The conditions of the spell being perfect, a shadowy face, supposed to be that of the maiden's future husband, will be seen in the glass, as if peeping over her shoulder.

Another Scotch ceremony into which the uncanny largely enters as an element, is described as follows: One or more go out, as the case may be (for this is a social spell), to a south running spring or rivulet, where "three lairds' lands meet," and dip the left shirt sleeve. Go to bed in sight of a fire and hang the wet sleeve before it to dry. Lie awake watching carefully, and about midnight an apparition having the exact figure of the grand object in question will come and turn the sleeve, as if to dry the other side of it.

Ducking for apples and the attempt to secure, by means of the mouth only, an apple balanced upon a stick suspended from the ceiling, upon the other end of which is placed a lighted candle, provokes much laughter and no little spirited competition. For a girl to know if she will marry within the year she must obtain a green peapod in which are exactly nine peas; hang it over the door, and if the next man guest entering be a bachelor her own marriage will follow within twelve months. This spell is sometimes tried at other times than at Hallowe'en, but the conditions then are generally considered less favorable.

Three small rings should be purchased by a maiden during the period of a new moon, each at a different place. She should tie them together with her left garter and place them in her left glove with a scrap of paper, cut heart shaped, on which her sweetheart's name has been written in blue ink. The whole should be placed under her pillow when retiring Hallowe'en and she will dream of her sweetheart if she is to marry him.

Anyhow, whether there be any "coming true" about these signs or not, the young people of to-day are like those of yesterday and long ago; they will try their fortunes and see.

DEAR NIECES AND NEPHEWS:

Once more we welcome October, gorgeous in her robes of autumn hues. How beautiful she is! and how charming are the woodlands where

"The sound of dropping nuts is heard
When all the woods are still."

Would that we might all grow old as gracefully as does the waning year! Ever making the most and the best of what remains. Cheerfully and with exactitude performing its daily round of duties, and murmuring not though its circle of usefulness and pleasure grows daily more and more narrow and restricted, until finally its work is finished, and its stiff, bare and barren surfaces are covered by the kindly snows.

Our first letter this month is a little out of our usual order of subjects, but is, to me, exceedingly interesting, and I hope Mrs. Barnes will soon favor us with a second letter. She says:

"I became much interested one autumn in a little colony which sojourned near me for several weeks, though at first they made me feel rather creepy, for they were neither more nor less than a number of small red and black worms that took up their quarters upon the leaves of a passion flower trained about my door. However, as they showed no disposition to intrude beyond the threshold, I grew accustomed to their presence and became interested in watching how fast they grew, and what an astonishing quantity of my vine they managed to consume. As it was late in the season, and the vine would soon be killed, I did not disturb the interlopers, but decided to take this opportunity to observe a little natural history.

"The small gourmands seemed to thrive wonderfully upon passion-flower, and soon attained a length of about three inches and the thickness of a lead pencil. Then they seemed to grow sleepy, stopped eating, and one by one began to attach themselves to the stems of the plant or to the window frames and weatherboarding, where they seemed to be going into a rapid decline, so shrunken and feeble did they appear. But lo! one morning I noticed that one of them had changed its form entirely, and was now encased in a shell not half the size of the full grown worm, but having the same colors of black and Indian red. Gradually they all took this form, though somehow I could never catch them at it, and hung, perfectly inanimate.

"No attention was paid them for some time, but one day some one exclaimed, 'Why, the chrysalids are coming to life!'

"Sure enough, by the side of a broken shell there was a butterfly with crumpled silken wings and shining eyes that seemed to look out upon the world with positive intelligence. In a few days a number of these beauties, still dressed in the family colors, black and red, fluttered about the house, some even making their way inside, where we enjoyed offering them sugar and water, and watching them unroll their long probosces to partake of it. One by one they fluttered away, whether to lay their eggs and die or to hibernate in a sheltered place as some species do I am not naturalist enough to say.

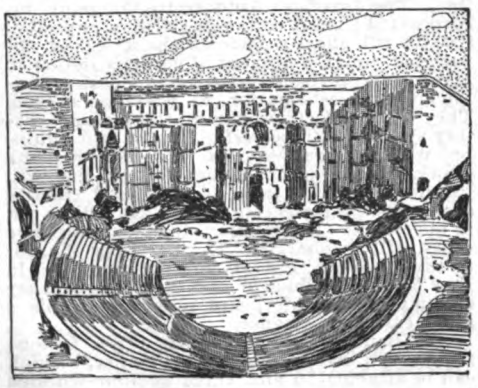
"I had watched three stages of the life of this family of lepidoptera, the worm, the chrysalis and the butterfly; only one remaining, the egg, from which is again hatched the worm.

"If Aunt Minerva will allow me I may in a future letter tell you about some other beautiful chrysalids."

MRS. M. S. BARNES, Nashville, Tenn.

The two following letters were accidentally omitted from the August number of COMFORT.

"I wonder how many of Aunt Minerva's nephews and nieces have ever taken thought as to the number of hands through which the luscious strawberry passes ere it reaches the table, as beautiful as it is delicious. You have all read, no doubt, of the great strawberry fields of northwestern Arkansas and southeastern Missouri, where hundreds of acres are grown, and of thousands of people congregating near Sarcoxie, Mo., to pick strawberries. Southeastern Kansas is coming to the front as a strawberry producing country, immense crops of fine berries having been produced here.



"But now as to the harvesting of the berries. The pickers—men, women and children of all sizes, ages, and colors—carry wooden trays, or carriers, holding from six to eight quart boxes, which, after they are filled with berries, are 'faced'; that is, the berries on top are turned stem downward. When the picker goes into the field with his tray of empty boxes he is given a certain row by one of the field 'bosses', whose business it is also to see that the berries are properly picked, that is, not over-ripe nor yet too green, and with stems about half an inch long, and also to see that the pickers do not injure the plants.

"After the boxes are filled and faced they are taken to the shed, where the ticket agent, usually a lady, receives them and gives in return a ticket showing the number of quarts picked. And here is where the ticket agent must keep her eyes open, for some unscrupulous person will probably have his boxes filled half-full of leaves or other trash; or some mischievous youngster may have found a small snake or terrapin in the field and put it into a box of berries, and if she doesn't detect an unusual twinkle in that boy's eye she is liable to pay for that box along with the rest. After the berries are received at the shed the packers put them into crates holding twenty-four quarts each. They are then nailed up and are billed, and ready to be shipped. Other employes, besides those already named, are the foreman, the shipping and billing clerks, and the dairymen.

"The pickers receive one and one-half cents a quart for picking, and a good picker, in a good season, can pick a hundred or more quarts a day. A thirty acre field will employ three hundred pickers, and as the season, beginning here the first week of May, lasts from three to four weeks, some idea can be had of the amonnt paid for picking. The pickers usually receive their pay at the end of each week, though sometimes not until the end of the season. After the season is over the field is cleared of all weeds and cultivated."

LEONA WHITE, Columbus, Kansas.

"One of the most interesting points for the tourist to visit in France is the old town of Orange, in the department of Vaucluse, standing in the midst of fertile meadows, orchards and mulberry plantations. The Roman remains are what impart a peculiar interest to this town. Conspicuous amongst these is the theater built against the hill commanding the town. It is one of the most beautiful and imposing remains of the old Roman architecture now extant. The facade is one hundred and eighteen feet high, three hundred and forty feet long, and thirteen feet thick, and is pierced by three square gates, surmounted by a range of blind arches and a double row of far-projecting corbels. Only the lower ranges of seats now remain, though it is presumable that the theater had a seating capacity of seven thousand when it was in good preservation. The Princes of Orange made it an outwork of the Castle which they erected on the hill, and which was demolished after DeGrignan had taken the town for Louis XIV. That monarch pronounced the Roman theater at Orange the most beautiful building in his kingdom.

"Up to the beginning of this century, this theater was filled with hovels and stables, but these are now swept away and the place is kept in the order to which it is entitled as one of the finest remains of the Roman Empire.

"Orange also boasts of a splendid triumphal arch, not only the finest in France, but ranking third in size and importance amongst those still extant in Europe. It measures seventy-two feet in height, sixty-nine feet in width, and twenty-six feet in depth, and is composed of three arches, supported by four Corinthian columns. On three sides it is well preserved, and displays great elegance and variety in its sculptured decorations. It seems to have been erected in the reign of Tiberius to judge by an inscription upon it.

"In the neighborhood of the theater at Orange, traces have been found of a hippodrome capable of containing twenty thousand persons, and statues, bas reliefs and aqueducts also show the importance of this old Roman town."

MARY W. EARLY, Lynchburg, Va.

One, at least, of my nieces had a delightful trip least, summer judging by the following letter.

"It was six o'clock in the evening when we reached Tadoussac, a quaint little village lying just at the mouth of the dark, mysterious Saguenay. As the boat could not pursue her way up the river until midnight on account of the tide, most of the passengers landed and proceeded to find out the attractions of the town.

"It may have been the twilight or perhaps the blackness of the Saguenay waters contrasted with the blue St. Lawrence, but there was a loneliness about the place which made one feel that it had been dropped down here among these wild, rugged Canadian mountains from some other world. A rough little up-hill path led from the wharf and gradually assumed the dignity of a street. At last low white houses made their appearance on either side of it.

"Not far from the water we found the pools for propagating salmon, and the golden fish flashed and played through the water perfectly indifferent to the groups of spectators on the banks. Tadoussac is famous for its fishing and in the summer numbers of anglers come to the one hotel of the place which is situated on the mountain side.

CATHOLIC CHURCH OVER TWO HUNDRED YEARS OLD—TADOUSSAC.

"Leaving the salmon pools, we continued our way to a small Roman Catholic church which stands almost on the shores of a bay, and marks the spot where the cross was first planted in these regions. It is a quaint little wooden structure over two hundred years old. On the altar two dim lamps were burning, but the church is only opened for divine service once a year, on the feast of St. Anne. Instead of the cross and usual altar emblems, there were displayed pictures and guide books, which were disposed of by a dark-eyed French girl who told us that the profits from these went toward keeping the church in repair. A tall, slender, black robed French priest with a fair, sweet face and gentle manners, told us, in very good English, the history of the church. Standing in the small, dimly lighted building, with the murmur of the river breaking faintly on the ear, one could not help a feeling of deep reverence for this place, hallowed by two hundred years of prayers and devotions. How many have knelt before this simple communion rail, people who lived and died in this quiet village, without knowing anything of the great world beyond their lofty mountains!

"Night was closing in as we left the church and retraced our steps to the boat, where we sat for awhile and watched the phosphorescent light on the black water, and then retired to our berths, leaving Tadoussac, wrapped in the embrace of the rugged hills, where she seemed to nestle contentedly."

GENEVIEVE FLEMING, Washington, D. C.

THE FLOOD VILLA, MENLO PARK, CALIFORNIA.

The following description of the "Flood" Place makes one's heart swell with thankfulness that when wealth was placed in the hands of Miss Jennie Flood it was in the possession of one "who loved her fellow-men."

"At Fair Oaks, California, thirty miles south of San Francisco, is situated one of the finest estates ever bequeathed to an educational institution, and the finest country seat in the state—the Flood villa, recently presented to the State University by Miss Jennie Flood. The hundreds of elaborately cultivated acres comprising the estate are enclosed by a high and very beautiful fence with posts and massive gates of such intricate workmanship that its construction alone cost a fortune. High above this fence, which extends about a mile, the splendid live oaks and other trees lift their branches and so completely shut off any view of the interior that it is not until the gates are reached that one can obtain even a meager view of the place through the long avenue that leads to the house.

"With the coming of the earliest spring days all those trees and shrubs of the southland and the hardier species, such as the lilac and catalpa, scattered so plentifully about the grounds, burst into bloom and fill the air with delicious sweetness, while great roses and delicate vines drooping from amid high oak branches brighten the dense green of their surroundings with their long sprays of flowers.

"Passing down the driveway one comes here and there upon a graceful little arbor formed by the fastening together of long branches of neighboring palm trees and fern asparagus, or some artistic bronze figure amid the greenery, until the great fountain confronts one as if to eclipse what has gone before and to prepare one for the massive magnificence of the mansion. This fountain, situated just before the wide front veranda, rises from the center of acres of lawn and is supported by many tall and graceful figures. The smooth green terrace with its marble steps leading to this fountain and its ivy covered balustrades reminds one of the terraced grounds of Italian villas and lends a foreign aspect to the scene. One of the distinctive features of the place is its countless number of palm trees, among the first to be planted in California, whose lofty spreading fronds seemingly emit the sunny warmth of the tropics and the tranquility of those southern islands whose flora is even more exuberant than that of California. The house itself, which was built by a French nobleman, is exceedingly splendid, is patterned after a chateau, and is ornamented with artistic carvings and the many other beautiful embellishments in which French architects delight.

"Owing to its vast proportions the faculty of the university have decided to use this estate for a college of agriculture, retaining the mansion as it is for the use of the professors and students, and nowhere could be found a more inviting place for scholars or a spot more fitted to inspire one with the love of all that is beautiful in nature, as well as with the love of learning."

MAUD B. RODGERS, San Francisco, Cal.

Now comes the description of another western wonder.

"In Spokane County, Washington, is to be found a most remarkable rock, of colossal proportions, and of peculiar formation and shape. Far and wide it is known as Giant Rock, and the vast upheaval certainly merits that cognomen. Around the base it measures more than twelve hundred feet. From base to apex, three hundred. The huge pile tapers a little, in a rough, unsymmetrical manner, and the top is nearly round, but not level. It rises abruptly from the southern side of a high, rugged and sparsely timbered mountain, the ground all around its base being very steep and precipitous. It is, so far as can be determined, a single stone, utterly bare of vegetation or soil. It is a very conspicuous landmark, being visible for miles, towering aloft like a mighty sentinel.

"From only the southern side can Giant Rock be ascended. On all others it rises nearly perpendicular, and even on the southern side the ascent is one of great difficulty and peril, but the magnificent view from its summit amply repays the climber. The rock is not difficult to reach, as a winding roadway leads up the side of the mountain, and the ascent is so gradual that travel is easy either on horseback or in a carriage. Hundreds of tourists visit it every year, but only men have, thus far, attempted to scale its rugged side. The feat is too arduous and too perilous for a woman's strength."

J. MAYNE BALTIMORE, Spokane, Wash.

The subject of our next letter, although much written up, is one which never grows old, and of which we never tire.

"The Mountain of the Holy Cross is fourteen miles from Red Cliff, Colorado. Its altitude is 14,176 feet. Near its summit is the cross, which is formed by deep fissures worn in the mountain side, in the form of a cross. So deep are these fissures that the snow in them never melts, and when it disappears from the surrounding surfaces, the cross may be seen from a great distance. It is about one hundred miles from here, but may be plainly seen by the naked eye, by climbing one of the mountains.

"When I saw it, eight years ago, it was perfect, and it seemed to me that it had been placed there, as it were, by the hand of God, in the eternal rocks. that we might not forget Him in these far away Rockies. But it has since been defaced by a land slide, which carried away portions of one arm. Would it not be a noble work for some philanthropist to spend a few hundreds or thousands, if need be, to restore this heavenly emblem? Perhaps God has suffered it to be thus moved, in order to rouse in the soul of some whom He has blessed with abundance, something of the spirit which animated all Christendom in the war of the Crusaders."

MRS. F. A. MITCHELL, Montezuma, Colorado.

Now our space is full, and we must gather up the remainder of our budget and store it away in Aunt Minerva's wall pocket, to wait until we come together again in November. In the meantime, may success and content and happiness attend you each and all.

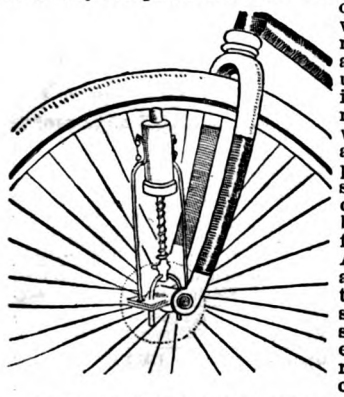
BY EVERETT G. WHEELMAN.

THERE is "something new under the sun" all the time in the cycling world. It is my business to keep you informed of these things, but don't, I beg of you, write me for addresses of dealers or inventors, as it is utterly impossible for me to give them to you.



The truth of the old adage "Time is money" was never more effectively demonstrated than in the case of multimillionaire Fiske, who, with an income reckoned to be somewhere in the neighborhood of a dollar a minute, came to the conclusion that he wasted entirely too much valuable time in going to and from his office.

Now Mr. Fiske's residence is in the New York suburbs, quite an hour's ride away from the heart of the metropolis, and he conceived the idea of devoting the two hours daily spent in travel to the demands of his business and his toilet. He therefore caused to be constructed an automobile large enough to hold a desk, pigeon-hole shelving and typewriting outfit, his stenographer and a caller or two, with a small dressing room attached.

The automobile office is, during business hours, backed up against the millionaire's place of business, with door wide open to allow easy access to books and papers. When errands are to be performed or he seeks his home, Mr. Fiske enters the "auto" with his stenographer, continuing the work en route or perhaps engaged in completing his toilet for dinner.

Arriving home, he is ready to discuss his meal at once, no time being lost, as formerly, in dressing. The next morning, his evening suit having been brushed and transferred to the "auto" by his valet, and his business suit having been dittoed and hung in his home dressing room, the busy man rises, dresses, breakfasts, enters his portable office and begins work at once—and so on ad infinitum.

The bicycle pump illustrated here is designed to be fixed on each wheel, remaining inactive until the tire begins to deflate, either from a puncture or through the minute holes which sometimes render a tire useless because there is no way to repair them at all. To fit this pump on a bicycle wheel only requires a few minutes, and it is always ready to work as soon as the air pressure inside the tire decreases beyond a fixed limit. A collar is attached to the hub by screws, to support the ends of the rods which carry the pump cylinder. The piston rod is forced toward the hub by an external spring, which receives the force of the plunger stroke. When the air pressure is decreased to a certain point, the spring forces the plunger down at each stroke of the pump, driving air into the tire until the resistance becomes greater than the strength of the spring again. The plunger is operated by an eccentric cam attached to the frame at one end of the hub. The inventor of this pump is Albert L. Crandall, of Oaks Corners, N.Y.

PUMP TO KEEP PUNCTURED TIRE INFLATED.

A Brooklyn, N. Y. concern is manufacturing a self-propelled chemical fire engine, for which a speed of fifty miles an hour is claimed. This machine is designed to accommodate a crew of four men, and resembles in frame construction two tandems coupled, and, with a long rear extension of the frame to accommodate the fire extinguishing apparatus and the motor, which is of the gasoline type.

There is an almost entire absence of odor and the exhaust is so muffled as to be unappreciable. Carbon dioxide gas is used as an extinguisher.

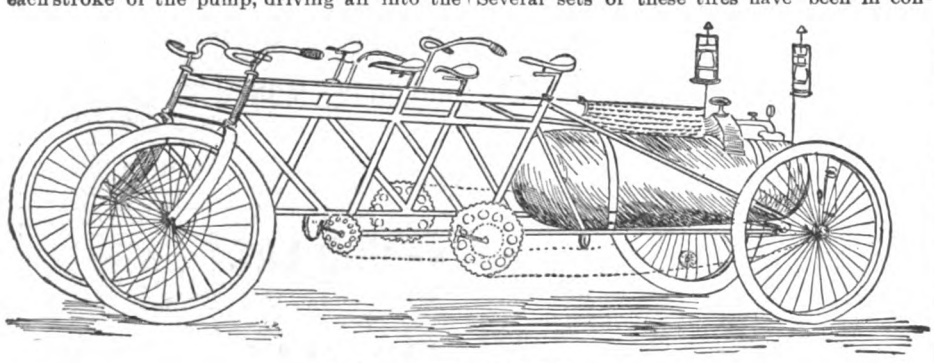
Should a mishap occur to the motor or to either of the chains of the double tandem, the other chain will carry the engine to the scene of the fire, so that the chance of additional fire damage as a result of delay is reduced to a minimum.

A very ingenious bicycle track has been newly invented by two Southerners. While not a circle, nor an oval, nor yet kite-shaped, it has neither beginning nor end, and the arrangement of it is such that a rider may travel on it for an infinite distance without ever encountering another bicycler coming in the other direction.

One advantage of this style of track, a diagram of which is shown herewith, is that a long stretch of bicycle path is condensed into a very small space. At the same time a continual rotary movement in one direction is avoided, thus preventing dizziness.

As will be observed from the diagram, the rider moves in steadily decreasing curves towards the center, and then returns over increasing curves until he reaches the outer termination of the track. The word termination, however, is a misnomer, because a loop at that point carries the bicycle back to the place of starting.

The offer of the German Emperor of a prize of $20,000 for the most serviceable armored motor vehicle, equipped for actual fighting "at the front," resulted in the designing by an American company of a motor car for which the following claims are made. The car is of 40 horse-power, sheathed with armor and carrying two or more rapid-fire machine guns. It is capable of traveling at a rate of 20 miles an hour over ordinary roads with its equipment of armor guns, 10,000 rounds of ammunition and three men aboard. Owing to the liability of puncture, pneumatic tires are dispensed with, large rubber cushion tires being substituted. The vehicle will be able to travel over plowed fields and rocky ground at a fair rate of speed.

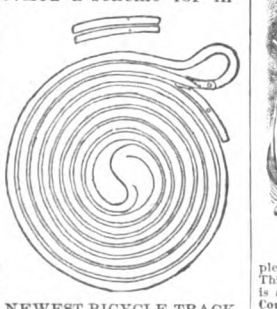


The vehicle will be in effect a moving fort, and, on account of its mobility, much more serviceable than an armored train running on rails. Some other advantages of the vehicle are that, in reconnoitering it can approach much nearer the enemy's lines than can cavalry.

When approaching an entrenched enemy it can be kept on the move while discharging its guns, thus offering a very poor target to artillery and rifle fire.

In actual conflict this automobile fort will have an armored motor tender, carrying reserve ammunition and stores. A battery of vehicles of this character would prove quite formidable in operations against an enemy, whether in the open or entrenched; they could hold their own on long flanking marches in the enemy's country, and by means of a windlass and two thousand yards of steel wire rope which each will carry, could be worked by their own power up very steep declivities and down again without much trouble; they could give valuable assistance in mounting big guns on high ground that horses could hardly climb—their forty horse power directed wholly to the moving of a big gun would get it in position in a fraction of the time required by an equal number of horses, and without exposing horses and men to the effects of a galling fire. Had such a vehicle been on the field at the battle of Tugela River, several of Buller's guns would not now be turned against him. Where men and horses found it impossible to live, one such machine as the American inventor has designed could safely go, and one by one could have withdrawn the precious guns to a place of safety.

The fuel capacity of this warlike vehicle will give it a traveling radius of from one hundred and fifty to two hundred miles, and it is predicted that a battery of six of them could do much more effective work than a large cavalry force could travel, indeed where mounted soldiers would be practically useless.

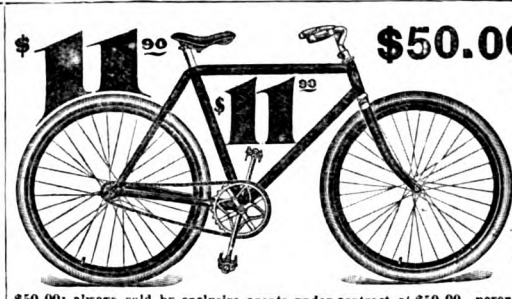


Letters patent have recently been issued to Robert J. Mitchell, of Waterfoot, England, for a tire made of solid felt, so hardened and milled as to be impervious to water, and combining long life with resiliency and elasticity. Several sets of these tires have been in constant use for some time, and they have given excellent service.

AUTO-CHEMICAL FIRE ENGINE.

The Russian War Department has been experimenting with freight automobiles, either steam or gasoline, and made a proposition that if any manufacturer would ship two such vehicles to St. Petersburg by the end of June, the department will pay the freight and duty on both, purchase the one best suited for its purpose and return the other. We have not heard the result.

A Westerner has devised a scheme for infallibly detecting the point of puncture in deflated automobile and bicycle tires. An ammoniacal solution is forced through the valve, and a chemically prepared white cloth is passed over the outer surface of the tire. When the cloth passes over the puncture the escaping ether of the ammonia causes the cloth to turn blue at that point—and there you are.



NEWEST BICYCLE TRACK.

An American automobile manufacturer has accepted an order from an English nobleman to build him a self-propelled vehicle which is capable of covering 60 miles an hour over good roads. Steam will be the motive power, and the contract price is said to be $8000. The expert has figured it out and in order to fulfill the terms of the agreement the motor must be of 36 horse-power.

The Chinese Minister to the United States is having built, along lines planned by himself, a gorgeous automobile of the phaeton type, Oriental yellow and the velvet upholstering will be of the same hue.

Washington will be the first city in this country to have a horseless and trackless car line. The American Autocarette Company, incorporated a short time ago, with a capital of $200,000 will shortly place on the streets of the national capital a number of vehicles similar in many respects to a street car, but smaller, having accommodations for 20 passengers each. They will be electrics, run on the storage battery system, with powerful motors and equipped with solid rubber tires. For the present a trunk line running the length of the city will be established, but later, as additional carettes are secured, intersecting cross lines will be put in operation. The regular street car fare, five cents, will be charged. Regular lines of automobile coaches are at present running in New York and Chicago and Boston but they are on the 'bus order, and nowise resemble a street car in appearance.

The Banker brothers, Pittsburg's famous racing men, have designed a "trailer," which can be attached to any three or four-wheeled motorcycle. This attachment is not only a great convenience in adding to the accommodations of the vehicle, but the occupant of the trailer can "work his passage" by assisting the motor in climbing stiff grades. The wheel hub is fitted with coaster and brake for use under normal conditions.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE request from one of our readers of Passaic, N. J., for something unique for presents to students—such as the little book mark which appeared in these columns sometime ago—is a hard one to fill, but we hope next month to be able to give something that will be suitable for modest Christmas gifts, and it is possible we may find something in the same line as the book mark referred to.

We have had requests for suggestions for winter window gardens. It is possible in this age of cheap seeds and plants for any one who cares to do so to have a winter window garden, if one is willing to give a little time and thought to the matter. Given a sunny window and a little intelligent care, and some plants will grow almost as readily in the window as out of doors. Other plants will not thrive in the window, and it is useless to attempt to make them do so. It is a waste of time to undertake to grow the violet, sweet pea or the pansy in the ordinary window. But the list of plants that will grow in the window is so long and so satisfactory that one can well afford to give up the flowers I have named.

It is easy to get good plants from seeds, from bulbs and from cuttings that some of your friends may be willing to give you. The kind of plants selected must depend largely upon the situation of your window. It will be of no use for you to undertake to grow nasturtiums in a window in which there is scarcely any sunlight, or in a room in which the temperature is kept above 70 degrees all of the time. There are plants that require but little sunshine, and others particularly adapted to a warm room.

If I were going to undertake the culture of plants in the house, I would first provide myself with proper soil. A potting soil adapted to nearly all plants has in it certain proportions of sand, leaf-mould, manure and ordinary garden soil, or soil from old sods. The city dweller living in a flat or in a house without any ground around it will find it best to go to a florist and buy potting soil which is very inexpensive. Enough for a dozen or more plants can be had for twenty-five cents. If one is to prepare one's soil, take equal parts of garden soil, leaf-mould, clean sand and thoroughly rotted cow manure and mix them well together. The preparation of one's own leaf-mould requires a long time, and it does not pay to undertake it for a small number of plants. Go to the woods and get it in the form of rotted leaves under the trees. Mix these four ingredients together, and you will have a soil in which almost any plant or flower seed will grow.

Geraniums are about as satisfactory a house plant as one can grow. They are so easy of cultivation, the plant itself is handsome and the flowers of well cared for plants are abundant and beautiful. The Souvenir de Mirande is one of the best of the winter bloomers. It has no superior and I know of but one other that equals it in beauty and in profusion of bloom, and that is the Mrs. Vick. Single geraniums are better than the double varieties for the window garden. They bloom more profusely and the bloom is more likely to be perfect.

Do not, however, in your selection of plants of any kind make the mistake of buying plants in full bloom, or of taking up plants that have bloomed all summer in the expectation of having them bloom right along all winter. They will not do it. All plants need a season of rest. The perpetual bloomer is almost unknown outside of the tropics. If there are geraniums now growing in your garden, take cuttings from them and root them in common sand. Break off the slips, or cuttings, sink these in the sand to the depth of about an inch, wet the sand thoroughly and set it in a light and sunny place. The sand should then be kept constantly moist. Thus treated, geraniums, fuschias, coleus and many other kinds of cuttings will throw out roots; after they have done so, pot them in four or five inch pots and set them in a partially shaded place until the roots have taken hold in the soil. It does not injure a well-grown plant to take cuttings from it. Beside the geraniums named, the Mrs. Moore, Bridesmaid, Jean Sisley and Sunshine are all admirably adapted to the winter window garden. All are of the single variety. If you decidedly prefer the double geraniums, none are better for the window garden than the Amie Host and Pocahontas.

The Speciosa is about the only variety of fuschia that can be depended upon to bloom in the winter months. All other kinds are distinctively summer bloomers. The Speciosa is quite a free bloomer, but its flowers are smaller than those of other fuschias.

The abutilon is easily grown in the house by amateurs, and it is sure to give pleasure. Boule de Neige is a pure white variety. Golden Fleece is a light yellow and Crusader is a glowing crimson. But one of the finest of all of the abutilons is the Souvenir de Bonn. It has very beautiful foliage, its leaves being a light green edged and veined with white. It is a free bloomer and a most satisfactory plant in every way.

I would not advise the amateur to undertake the cultivation of roses in the window garden. The rose requires a good many conditions almost impossible to secure in the house, and only the experienced flower grower can hope to succeed with it. The atmosphere of the ordinary living room lacks the moisture required by the rose. It is, moreover, a plant that every sort of insect marks for its own, and it is usually a disappointment as a house plant. If you want to "try your luck" with the rose you will be as likely to succeed with the Hermosa as with any other variety.

Many bulbous plants are admirably adapted to house culture. Among them none are prettier or more readily grown than the freesia, a very pretty cream white flower with the most delicate and delicious fragrance. Bulbs of the freesia should be potted very soon. Hyacinths, narcissus and crocus are easier to grow in the house than the tulip. Pot the bulbs any time from September to November; water well and set the pots away in some dark and cool place until the green points of the leaves show above the soil. This may not be for six or eight weeks. When it does occur bring the pots into the sunlight and keep them in rather a low temperature remembering that bulbous plants require a good deal of moisture both in the soil and atmosphere. Lack of moisture and overheated rooms have often been the cause of failure with bulbous plants.

Begonias of certain varieties are admirably adapted to house culture. Among the best are Bruanti, Insignis, and Sandersoni, a variety having coral-like flowers and beautiful foliage.

It is not so easy to succeed with ferns although there are several kinds well adapted to house culture. The best and most easily grown is the variety known as the sword fern. It does best in partial shade and it is a very graceful and satisfactory plant. Palms and rubber trees do well in the ordinary living room, but most amateurs prefer flowering plants.

If your rooms must be kept hot and dry you can grow the cactus in them, and while it has little beauty as a plant its flowers are often striking and beautiful.

Several varieties of coleus are fine for window gardens, and a pot or two of the brightest-hued kinds will give continual brightness to your window garden. They are very easily grown and will thrive under conditions that would be the death of some other plants.

If you want a vine to run around your window nothing will grow more freely than German Ivy and the Maderia vine. Do not try smilax. It will not do well outside the greenhouse. The common morning-glory does well in a cool room. The bloom will be smaller and less profuse than when the plant is grown out of doors, but the flowers are very pretty and dainty. Callas are favorites with many, and they are easily grown in a warm room if the soil is kept moist. Those who have tried it say that a spoonful of castor oil dug into the soil once in two or three weeks is a powerful stimulant to the calla. Seeds of annuals like nasturtiums, petunias, portulacca, alyssum and morning-glory may be sown in the fall, and will make fine young plants for transferring to the window garden later.

Proper potting of all plants is of the first importance. Do not use large pots or you will get more foliage than bloom. First put a few pebbles or pieces of broken pot to secure drainage. Over this put a little moss or something similar to keep the soil above the pebbles. Put in an inch or two of soil and set the plant in the center, add soil pressing it firmly around the plant until the pot is full to within a half an inch of the top. This will keep the water from running off. Keep the pots in the shade until the plants show signs of having taken root.

Water your plants properly. Many failures result from too much or too little water. It may be well to seek advice of your friends who have had experience with plants like those you propose to cultivate. Never allow the soil to become dry and baked in the pot. The cultivation of a great variety of beautiful plants is possible if one is only patient and persevering and intelligent in the care of them. No great skill or superior wisdom is required, and the outlay of money need not be at all large. It will be an advantage for you to take a good floral magazine, and the best of these magazines are very inexpensive.

Convenient to hang beside the dressing table, and quite ornamental as well, is a holder for the curling iron, made from ribbon.

Select a ribbon three inches wide and five-eighths of a yard long. Cut off twelve inches and fold across. Overhand the edges together, leaving the top open, and feather-stitch the front with silk of the same shade.

Cut a piece of black flannel a little narrower and two inches shorter than the remaining piece of ribbon. Pink the edge and bottom of the flannel and hem the upper straight edge under the upper edge of the ribbon. Fringe the lower edge of the ribbon, and sew the top to the back of the ribbon pocket first made, about an inch above the bottom.

Select a brass ring three-quarters of an inch in diameter, and hem the open top of the ribbon pocket over the ring.

This will gather the ribbon, and yet will keep the top open ready to receive the curling iron. Suspend all by a narrow ribbon. The flannel is of course used to wipe the iron upon after heating.

Mrs. Darrow of Minneapolis, who has given us many good hints in the past, now contributes the following directions for making rugs from pieces of silk. She says:

"The ideal house has bare hard wood floors and a great many rugs. All cannot have the hard polished floors but all might have rugs. Some of the work of rug making may be taken in the hands as easily as a bit of crochet work.

"For instance, those made of silk pieces. You will be surprised at the amount you can collect—old silk dresses, silk trimmings, neck ties, parasols, colored umbrellas, faded ribbons. You can use faded pieces; if your pieces are badly soiled clean with benzine; have a large box. The prettiest are made hit and miss. To make it even the pieces should all be cut and well mixed. Cut the pieces the same size unless if very thin you can cut a little wider as they will not fill up as the heavy ones do.

"Cut a paper for a pattern, 2 inches long and 7-8 of an inch wide. Cut all your pieces from this pattern when well mixed. Use macrame cord of a dark color and bone needles with a nob on one end. The needles are 10 inches long and half an inch around. Make 25 stitches as for garter stitch, slip off first stitch, put one of the silk pieces between the first and second stitch, knit second stitch, put the end of silk that is next to you over between second and third stitch, knit third stitch, repeat across. The ends will be all on the same side. Next row knit across plain with the cord. Next row knit as the first, putting in silk. You put in silk pieces every other row and slip off first stitch every time. Make rug as large as you can find pieces, one yard wide and two yards long makes a handsome one. Sew the strips together on wrong side; If you have your colors well mixed you can't tell from the right side where it is put together. It will wear much longer if cotton wadding is put on wrong side and than brown heavy cambric, catching on wrong side a few times to hold cotton in place. Sew fringe at both ends. Worsted pieces can be used the same way."

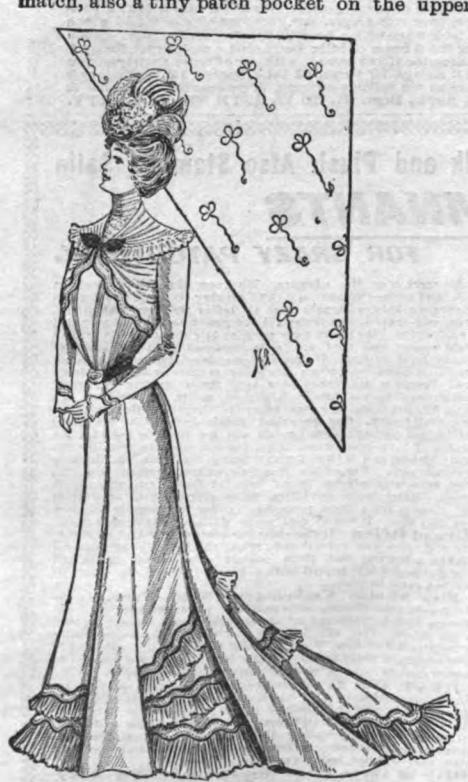
COMFORT, Silk Dept. B, Augusta, Maine.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE very latest cry is the waist buttoned at the back, and they are frequently made of hemstitched silk or linen, tucks being the next in favor. The mode is so girlish it is sure to be the most popular new idea in bodices. One of the season's novelties is the sashes worn with dainty frocks. They are of the new soft ribbons of satin taffeta or satin mousseline, wide, and always of two or three of the pastel shades in combination. Some one color of the ribbon is twisted around the waist once and tied in the back with two ends, one long and one short and a rosette in which the different shades are combined. When but two colors are used, the sash is tied with one long end, and a single loop reaching almost to the hem of the gown. Nothing more satisfactory, in the way of dress garniture has been in vogue than the blending of these beautiful pastel tints in dainty sashes. These soft satin ribbons are now manufactured in all the deeper tones as well as pastel.



Short walking skirts are even more in evidence than seemed probable a month ago. The rainy day skirt has been worn in Paris and now French modistes are bringing out a short skirt that will be sent over to New York this fall with the cachet of French approval and find itself the rage for street wear and will be worn by the society and business woman alike. This new skirt is cut circular fashion. It escapes the ground two inches and has a turned-in plait at the back and finished with a variety of stitching at the bottom. In league with short skirts are the obnoxious high-heeled, narrow-toed walking shoes. It seems almost inconceivable that a sensible fashion will bring in its trail one so wholly absurd and unbeautiful. But already the fall shoes are seen with tilting little heels and pointed toes. When the feminine foot is visible vanity always creeps into footgear, and yet the short skirt is hailed as a symbol of woman's increasing intelligence.

An inexpensive and very stylish evening cape is made up in pale tan cloth, three-quarters length and lined with white satin. The high collar is lined with ruched chiffon which forms a large bow with ends in front.

Dark blue serges and cheviots are once more before our eyes and welcomed like old and well-tried friends. No color is more suitable and becoming during the late autumn. An effective model for a good figure has a three-piece skirt with a plain front breadth and on either side of this the side pieces are laid in three two-inch pleats over the hips, the pleats extending nearly to the foot of the skirt. At the back is an inverted pleat—the short jaunty coat is plain and well-fitted, with a slightly bloused, double-breasted front fastened with eight large silver buttons—the revers and collar are coat shape and made of white broadcloth with rows of blue silk—there are turn-back cuffs and a belt to match, also a tiny patch pocket on the upper left-hand side with top band of cloth matching collar. With this is worn a vest and standing collar of white pique.

Another pretty model for a blue serge has a seven gored skirt each gore ending in a wide pleat at the foot—the short coat has rounded fronts and back to match falling about three inches below the waistline. A square collar and long revers of white taffeta embroidered in tiny checks are the finishing touches. The waist is of white taffeta with box-pleat, the ends of the cravat and cuffs embroidered to match revers.

The bell sleeves are very fetching in the new fall models for street wear. Hardly an outside coat or jacket but boasts of the bell sleeve, in an exaggerated form, or the frill Bishop sleeve with a wide loose cuff.

The blouse is with us again as an outside wrap and also in suit form, generally made still more smart by the addition of one or two tiny capes fitted over the shoulders.

A dainty patent leather belt for young women is made with a tiny pointed piece in front, giving the pointed, long-waisted effect so much liked just now. It opens a trifle at one side and has a strap buckle to set off the other side. The newest handkerchiefs show narrow tinted borders and initials.

The shops are full of the most beautiful designs in ribbons which tends to prove that they are to be more fashionable than ever. Some of them display brocaded and flowered designs in three or four shadings artistically blended together. Soft ribbons are preferred to heavy, stiff ones, the reason for this being they can so much more easily be drawn closely to the figure in the draped belts that are seen under the boleros, and also because they tie in such graceful bows. Many of the made sashes are finished with fringes, either the knotted silk fringe or the chenille sort, the latter only being used on heavy ribbons. This chenille fringe is to be a feature of our winter dress trimming, being applied lavishly on gowns of light cloth, velvet, or silk. The favorite style is about two inches long without a heading.

Bows in the hair add greatly to the smartness of our every coiffure, and may be worn either at the side or directly in front. They are made of twisted velvet or satin ribbon and are tied in small bowknots or two short loops with pointed ends. These bows are always made of black which is a sharp contrast to the rage for color of last year.

Long coats and short coats for children and Misses show the same tendency toward the picturesque in sleeves and shoulder capes—these latter very often of panne velvet, while still more often the revers and cuffs are made of this material heavily stitched.

Close-fitting effects over the shoulders will be fashionable for some time to come while the straight rows and long line is absolutely necessary to a fashionable figure. Bands of passementerie will be lavishly used on winter gowns. They are put on so that they apparently start from the shoulder, then curve down to a point in the front of the waist. One very odd line is given by carrying the material across the top of the sleeve so as to meet the first line of embroidery on the waist, so that the line where the sleeve meets the waist at the armhole is hardly visible. This intensifies the sloping shoulder effect.

FAMOUS VASES OF THE WORLD.

DENGLER.

THESE are some very beautiful specimens which are composed of other materials than pottery, which deserve honorable mention and they will be considered in these papers.

It is not definitely known where or when the costly and remarkable Mantua vase was produced; but as its workmanship is of the most superior kind, so that it could only have been executed by a very great artist, several learned men have thought that it may have formed a part of the celebrated collection of vases which Mithridates, the great King of Pontus, the renowned enemy of Rome, is known to have formed from the finest works of the most skilled masters of Greece and Asia Minor. It is thought also that this vase may have come into Europe, in the first place, after Stratonice, the wife of Mithridates, surrendered a castle of the Bosphorus, which she had in her keeping, to the Roman, Pompey the Great, with the King's treasure and precious effects; on condition that if her son Xiphares fell into his hands he should be restored to her. Pompey accepted only such presents as would serve to ornament temples, vases being among the number.

Mithridates returned his wife's favor to Pompey by putting her son to death in her sight. But Mithridates kept whatever he had of greatest value in Coina, or the New City; but Pompey took it also and everything there, including memoirs which Mithridates had written of himself, and a list of the persons he had poisoned, two of his own sons being among the number. Pliny also tells us of the recipes for medicines, poison and their antidotes, which were found stored in urns and vases, and that their treasures were brought to Rome by Pompey and dedicated in the temples of the gods. All this could have happened, but its authentic history commences in the sixteenth century, when it was in the possession of the dukes of Mantua, by the name of which town it has ever since been distinguished.

When the city of Mantua was taken by the Austrian General Colato in 1630, the ducal palace was plundered, and among its treasures was this rare vase. The duke Lauenbury, seeing it in the hands of a common soldier who was ignorant of its great value, bought it of him for one hundred ducats. It passed from one owner to another into the possession of the duke of Brunswick-Bevern.

Later on, 1766, Charles I. of the house of Brunswick bought the vase from his cousin and removed it to his palace, where it remained until after the battle of Jena in 1806, when it was taken to England to save it from the French.

It was restored to the Brunswick Museum, but disappeared in 1830, and was neither seen nor heard of for forty years.

There lived in those regions a very eccentric person, who was the owner of many diamonds and other precious stones, and ceramic treasures of all kinds. Catalogues of his vast heritage have been published and the articles have been carefully described, and their values estimated.

This person was none other than Charles II, ex-duke of Brunswick, who, on account of the riots which followed his deposition, removed it from the Brunswick Museum to his own possession. This was known at the time, as a receipt in his own handwriting had been seen; but as the vase was never seen after the burning of the ducal palace in 1830, and as the late ex-duke Charles II (1840) never alluded to it when displaying his other precious articles, it was generally supposed to have been left behind him in his hurried flight from the vengeance of his infuriated subjects, and to have perished with many other works of art.

THE MANTUA VASE.

Antiquarians who knew of the vase deplored its loss for all those years.

The ex-duke Charles II finally went the way of all the earth, having bequeathed his treasures to the city of Geneva. While examining and cataloging these treasures, his executors came upon a vase made of silver, of rude shape and apparently of but trifling value. Its weight, however, was so much greater, compared to its size, that it attracted attention, and upon being opened it was found to contain the long-lost vase of Mantua.

This vase was cut from a single onyx, the most perfect to be seen, and probably the finest ever known in Europe. Its value would be difficult to define, for one hundred and fifty years ago, when works of art did not command such prices as they do now, it was valued in the inventory of the Duchess Sophia Elizabeth at one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

There can be no doubt from its shape and ornaments but that it was destined for a guttus, a sort of pitcher used in sacrificial rites, from the spout of which oil, wine, or balsam was poured drop by drop on the neck of the victim, as a libation to the gods.

The cover, spout, handle and pedestal are of solid gold. The veining and shading of the onyx is so beautiful that it has been said, "Nature, and not art, produced this treasure."

From the hardness of the material it is easy to suppose that its execution must have occupied nearly the whole of the life of its creator, and was worth a king's ransom.

The height of the vase is six inches and three-quarters. It contains twelve figures and represents the "Feast of Ceres and Bacchus," and in the celebration of their mysterious rites it was probably once used.

Its antiquity has never been doubted, nor the fact that it is the work of one of the most eminent artists of ancient Greece; of one of those masters whose name and history alike have perished, but who will live eternally in their works, defying imitation.

THE BRYANT VASE.

As our own country is rich in works of art some of its finest vases will be given a place also. The Bryant vase was wrought in silver and was presented to the honored poet, William Cullen Bryant by his admiring friends and countrymen on his eightieth birthday.

Perhaps no single object in the whole American department in the main building of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia in 1876, attracted more attention than this artistic testimonial to the poet. It was designed by one of the chief artists of Tiffany & Company of New York, by whom it was made.

"At eighty," writes one who knew the poet well, "there was nothing old about him. His senses were perfect; his eyes needed no glasses; his hearing was extremely fine. Regular in all his habits, he retained his youth to the last."

The ornamentation of the vase is intended to symbolize Bryant's life through the medium of classic form, and is drawn from nature and suggested by his works. The primrose which is repeated many times on the vase represents youth; the ivy, age. The fringed gentian he remembers in one of his poems.

In the left oval medallion is a child looking up at a bust of Homer, to which his father, standing by, points as a model. The one on the right shows him in the woods, in meditation under a tree. Between these small medallions is a larger one containing a portrait of the poet. Above it is a lyre, symbolizing Bryant's verse. Beneath it is a most primitive printing-press, signifying his connection, for over half a century, with the New York Evening Post. In a still smaller medallion is the figure of a water fowl, as an emblem of faith, and introduced, for that reason, as the keynote of his poetic soul. This brings to mind the last stanza of his exquisite poem, "To a Waterfowl;"

"He who, from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone,
Will lead my steps aright."

On the lower part of the body of the vase are ears of Indian corn, and at the foot are waterlily leaves, emblematical of eloquence, signifying Bryant's oratory. In the handles are bobolinks, suggesting his poem "Robert of Lincoln," which has been set to music. On the base which supports the vase is a bound sheaf of wheat, which expresses 'work well done.' The broken shackle points to Bryant's services in the cause of negro emancipation. These designs from nature were thought to be the fittest symbols, and the most appropriate means of illustrating the poetical achievements of the poet whose verse teems with symbols drawn from nature, and to emphasize his well-rounded and useful life.

The Calvert vase was made in the Chesapeake pottery in Baltimore, and was shown for the first time at the Columbian Exhibition. It is twenty-eight inches high and twenty-six in width, including the handles, which are winged human figures. The cover is surmounted by a flame-point which emphasizes the Renaissance treatment of the entire piece. This is produced in rich, dark Pompadour red, the horizontal lines being in gold, which give a rich effect.

The Dengler is one of thirteen beautiful pieces which were produced by the late young and talented sculptor, Franz Xavier Dengler, who died at the age of twenty-five. He modelled from life, choosing child and bird forms. The initial illustration is one of them, and is in the Boston Art Museum. This is in a deep, rich red and ornamented in high relief.

CONDITIONS.

To have one's hands read in this department, by Digitus, one of the finest living palmists, it is necessary to observe the following conditions:

Impressions of both hands must be sent, fully postpaid and having the name, address and nom de plume of the sender enclosed in the package also.

The package must in every instance be accompanied by the names and addresses of eight new subscribers at twenty-five cents each, the whole amount, $2.00 being remitted, with the package, addressed to COMFORT PALMISTRY CLUB, Augusta, Maine.

No notice will be taken of impressions and requests for readings unless the sender has fully complied with the above conditions.

To take impressions, first hold two large pieces of blank paper over a candle or similar flame, until they are heavily coated with the smoke. Then lay these pieces down, smoke side uppermost on a pad of cotton. Now place the two hands, palms downward, one on each sheet of paper, pressing firmly and steadily down, but taking care not to move the hand. Keep them so for one minute and lift carefully, so as not to disturb the impression. Have ready some fixatif, which can be bought at a drug store or an art store or made with gum arabic and water in an atomizer. Spray this over the impressions before they are moved and allow them to dry. Then they are ready to send.

Smoked paper impressions are the best. But if it is desired to send a plaster cast, take plaster of Paris and dissolve in water to the consistency of thick cream. Pour this into a large shallow dish and when it is hardening place the hand, well-greased, palm downward, in the plaster, pressing downward. Several minutes will be required to get this impression and great care must be taken in removing the hand, not to break the plaster. Casts are exceedingly difficult to send without breaking and should be very carefully packed in a box with the name of the sender written on it. Putty is sometimes successfully used in place of plaster. A good photograph if sufficiently well taken to bring out all the lines, can also be read, although in all cases the smoked paper is the best, if properly treated with fixatif.

Bear in Mind that all the above conditions must be observed.

Also, that letters not complying with them will go into the waste-basket. Readings cannot appear for several months after impressions are sent.

THERE are several inquiries to be answered this month and I will take them up first. I am glad the interest in this department is so great that readers are stimulated to ask questions. I am often told that this is the best department of the kind in the world, so you see what the readers of COMFORT are getting free.

One asks if there are any lines telling if one will marry her ideal? There are; but they are so subtle that it is not possible to explain them here. The fate line starting from the mount of Venus and ending on the plain of Mars signifies a short life marked by many struggles for success attended by ambition, love and strife.

A marriage line under the little finger should be accompanied by a fine parallel lines running close to the fate or the life line at the time marriage is indicated. Without this accompanying line, the marks under the little finger signify engagements only. If these lines are forked at either or at both ends it signifies that the subject will outlive the object of their affections.

"Cyclop" asks: 1st. Does a spot on the mount of Jupiter always indicate disgrace or a fall from some high position? What does a short line rising from a spot on Jupiter, ascending towards the base of the first finger indicate? If a spot on Jupiter is inclosed in a square, what is the indication?

2. What is indicated by a fork in the Fate line just before it reaches the line of the head, both branches ascending towards the mount of Saturn, giving the appearance of a double Fate line from the point at which it forks?

A spot indicates a malady or a disgrace of some kind; when it is on Jupiter it may be modified by helpful lines elsewhere such as good fate line or by a star on Jupiter. A short line rising from such a spot and ascending towards the base of the index finger would be the sign of some gratified ambition. If the spot is enclosed by a square, wherever it may occur, the evil effect is eradicated; the square being a strong protection.

SPECIALIST.

A fork in the fate line such as indicated in the question may signify a marriage at that point and lasting as long as the line extends; or it may signify a new departure in business at the age indicated. In any case it is a lucky line and those who have it may be glad of it.

"Specialist" has a lucky hand, though it is marked by many lines indicating a nervous temperament. She has an intense nature and is very much in earnest in whatever she undertakes to do. She has strong individuality and will have decided opinions on every subject. Her hand is rather hollow and that foretells trouble; but she has so many other good signs that she need not look for many difficulties, and what she has she will see a way out of. Her health will be rather delicate through life; that is while she will not have severe illnesses she will have what is called "a weak constitution" and will not be as vigorous as many who may seem to be stronger. She will live to be eighty or over, with some threatening health aspects about the age of forty-five. She has the courage of her convictions and will be outspoken, even when she loses friends by it. She will meet with opposition from friends and relatives all through the early part of her life, but will persevere and carry out her desires in the end. She will have exceptional talent as an actress or a singer; but I think will marry young and so will miss a career. If she marries at the age of twenty, or under, it will be against the wishes of her family and the marriage will not last long; rather they will become gradually estranged and although the man will live as long as she, they will never come together again. I would advise her to wait until she is thirty before marrying; as that will turn out much better. She will have a number of love-affairs but she should be careful about marrying too young, for she is the kind of girl that the young men all take to and will always have plenty of admirers. I don't think her present courtship will end in marriage. She will have more or less of trouble with her head, such as brain trouble or severe headaches; but there are no indications of insanity or serious difficulties of any kind. Her disposition is good although her nervous temperament will tend to make her irritable at times, a tendency she should try to overcome. She will be wealthy in the latter part of life and will marry a rich man after she is thirty; in fact the best part of her life will come after thirty-five. She will travel a great deal, taking many short journeys in her own country and one or two eventful ones in foreign lands. Her fate line is extraordinarily good and so she will have a long, fortunate and in the main, a happy life.

"C. R." who attaches another word to her nom de plume which I can't make out, has a hand indicating much delicacy and refinement with conscientiousness and kindness combined. She is very straightforward in all her dealings, and will be a friend to be trusted. She, too, has a very nervous temperament, but has it in better control than the subject whose hand I have just read. She is lacking in the right kind of self-esteem, and really needs to have a better opinion of herself and her own abilities. She does not have the courage of her convictions for that reason, and often when she believes a certain course of action would be right and best, she lacks the courage to go ahead and carry it out. She has a good deal of ability, however, and is bound to be successful in what she undertakes, chiefly because her good sense will keep her from embarking on any foolish enterprises. She will have good judgment and whatever she sees to be safe and right will be pretty sure to be so. She will live to be quite an old lady and her luck will increase with her years. She married very young and made a fortunate, at least a happy marriage. She will outlive this husband, and will be thrown on her own resources and be very fortunate in her undertakings. She will have the respect and confidence of the community in which she lives, and this will increase as the years go by, so that she will occupy places of public honor and trust. She is kind and trustworthy to a degree; fond of music, art and sculpture; beautiful scenery appeals to her, and she is happy in the presence of nature in her grandest moods. She will be a favorite with women and be honored among them. If she belongs to a woman's club, she will rise to high position there. She has an enormous triangle in the middle of her hand, which is the sign of great good fortune, and, indeed the whole marking of her hand points to a long, successful and exceptionally happy life.

C. R.

Both these hands were properly represented by excellent impressions, taken according to the directions given above. It is a pleasure to read these; but if you are careless and send poor impressions without using fixatif, or anything to make them indelible, or if they are carelessly packed, they are nearly useless.

CONDUCTED BY AUNT SARAH.

THE entertaining season is with us again, and every woman has more or less of this to do—according to the amount of time she gives to society. If she is the mother of a brood of young children, her entertaining is considerably limited, because she is unable to accept many invitations out herself, so of course has fewer lunches, high teas, receptions and dinners to give in return.

At a lunch recently given by the President of a woman's literary club to the members, a dainty menu card was used for each guest, which we illustrate. This consisted of six cards measuring two inches by three-quarters of an inch. The cards were sewed to a strip of pale lavender ribbon which was a grain wider, and then the ribbon was folded in such a way that each course came in its order—the soup course being on top. Violets and heliotrope were used for table decorations, and the hostess wore a violet liberty silk accordion plaited gown.

We have been asked for a receipe for Harvard Fritters—and give it herewith.

Mix together one cup each of wheat and graham flour, one tablespoon corn meal, one half teaspoon salt and two teaspoons Baking Powder. Add enough milk to make a stiff batter, and drop from spoon into hot fat. Cook until brown, drain upon paper and serve with maple syrup.

GINGER NUTS.

One pound granulated sugar, one-half pound butter, one pound flour, two tablespoons white ginger and two eggs. Roll pieces of the dough in the hands like a marble, and bake in a quick oven.

MELON SALAD.

We illustrated, recently, ice cream served in cantaloupe. A salad may be served in the same way, and the melon may be cut to resemble a basket, with a bale. For the salad, cut the inside portion of the cantaloupe into small cubes. Mix together one-half cup sugar, one teaspoon cinnamon, one-fourth teaspoon mace, and sprinkle the mixture over one quart of the melon cubes. Pile into the melon baskets, and serve with forks.

A fruit salad, made of a combination of sliced fruit in season when the cantaloupes are, mixed with enough powdered sugar to take off the flat flavor, and then piled into the basket with the addition of a small amount of sherry wine or rum, makes a delightful dish, both to the eye and the palate.

GREEN GRAPE JELLY.

Remove stems and wash grapes; add a cup of water and cook until soft; drain in a bag. Reheat juice and when it boils, add one cup of sugar which has been heated in the oven, to each cup of juice; skim frequently and cook until the mixture jellies when tested in a cold glass. Cook no longer than is necessary, as the grape flavor is lost from long cooking.

BARBERRY CORDIAL.

Boil the barberries in a little water until tender and juicy. The juice is then pressed through a jelly strainer. To each pint of juice allow one cup of sugar—bring to the boil and then put in glass jars. In the summer, three tablespoons of this juice added to a glass of ice water makes a delightfully refreshing drink.

PICKLED NASTURTIUM SEEDS.

Gather the seeds and wash and dry them. Put them into salted vinegar, the proportion being one half teaspoon salt to each pint of vinegar—and let stand until all your seeds have been collected. Then scald fresh vinegar, add salt and the seeds, from which the old vinegar has been drained. Pour into bottles while hot, being sure that the seeds are completely covered with vinegar.

MELON BASKET.

One of our constant readers wants rules for removing stains from bed and table linen.

For fresh tea and coffee stains, place the stained linen over a bowl and pour over it boiling water, letting it fall from a height to give more force. For old stains, soak in cold water first and then use the boiling water.

To remove claret stains, cover the stains with salt, while yet fresh; let stand a few minutes and then rinse in cold water.

To remove mildew—soak in a solution of one tablespoon chloride lime in four quarts cold water. Sometimes the use of lemon juice and the sun will remove mildew.

Fresh fruit stains may be removed by pouring boiling water over the stains from a height. If of long standing, use three ounces oxalic acid to each pint of water. Wet the stain with the solution, place in the sun, or over a kettle of hot water to steam. Rinse well, and wet the stain with ammonia to counteract the acid left in.

To remove ink spots, put one or two drops oxalic acid on the stains, rinse in several waters and finally in ammonia.

For iron rust, cover the spots with salt and then with lemon juice; let stand and then add more salt and lemon juice. Rinse in clear water.

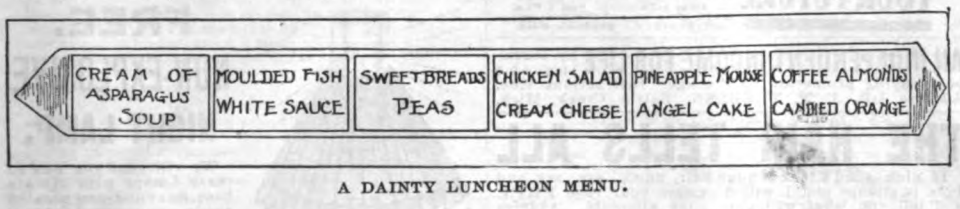
We have been asked for a rule for making toilet soap.

This is an exceedingly difficult thing to do on a small scale, as it is almost impossible to make a perfect chemical combination of grease and potash in small quantities.

Boil together one pound potash and twenty times its weight of water and five times its weight of clean fat, until a thick mass is formed which will draw into threads. Add one cup common salt and the soap will separate and rise to the top. Let stand until cold, when the soap may be easily removed. It is further improved by remelting with a little water.

If perfume is desired, add a few drops of essential oil at the melting stage—almond oil, cloves or lavender are the most agreeable.

After being poured into moulds, the soap should remain covered with towels, in a warm room, for twenty-four hours.



The addition of a small amount of cocoanut oil—in the proportion of one-fifth of the whole at the melting stage, furnishes a finer product.

The Scoharie Republican puts the well-known remark so often said to be used by young husbands to their wives, "such as mother used to make," into a pat little poem, in which the wife scores one on the husband:

Said a young and tactless husband
To his inexperienced wife:
"If you would but give up leading
Such a fashionable life,
And devote more time to cooking—
How to mix and when to bake—
Then perhaps you might make pastry
Such as mother used to make."
And the wife, resenting, answered,
(For the worm will turn, you know,)
"If you would but give up horses,
And a score of clubs or so,
To devote more time to business—
When to buy and what to stake—
Then, perhaps you might make money
Such as father used to make."

A SINGLE dish on the table of the Emperor Heliogabalus was worth twenty thousand pounds! In the degenerate days of the Roman Emperor Vitellius, a meal was given which cost over forty thousand pounds, and which consisted of over two thousand different dishes of fish and seven thousand different fowl, besides other courses in proportion. But the very costliest meal ever served, so far as recorded, was the supper given by Verus, one of the Roman aristocrats. The meal was intended for only twelve persons, yet it cost forty-eight thousand, five hundred pounds, in English money.

RHEUMATISM IS DEAD!

Long Live OXIEN, the King of Remedies that Killed it.

No more infernal tortures, no more roastings of the flesh with red hot irons, no more lightning shocks from the electric battery or dosings with dangerous drugs.

RHEUMATISM HAS BEEN CONQUERED by Oxien the triumph of medicine, the Godsend of the age. Absolute cures are now certain, and Oxien is making them every day. In this connection

WE HAVE A WORD TO SAY.

Oxien was last year put to the test as a remedy for Rheumatism and it made a record of absolute cures in Acute Rheumatism, frequently called rheumatic fever, Pericarditis (inflammation of the investing membrane of the heart), Endocarditis (inflammation of the living membrane of the heart), subacute rheumatism, sometimes applied to the less severe attacks of the disease, chronic rheumatism, which swells and twists the joints and sciatica, or neuralgia of the sciatic nerve. In fact Oxien is guaranteed to cure Rheumatism in any form. Thousands jump for joy and many write as follows:

Received OXIEN O. K. Found it far superior to what you represent. Have tried everything I could hear of for rheumatism. For ten years I have been crippled up with this terrible disease. Laid in bed one whole year. Could not turn or feed myself and when I was able to walk on crutches (which I did for four years) was crooked and unable to straighten up, but Oxien did it and you can imagine how happy I am now. Yours sincerely, Geo. F. Lawton, Olympia, Wash., Feby. 9th, 1898.

TALKS WITH GIRLS.

CONDUCTED BY COUSIN MARION.

How do you do, my dears, in the crimson glory of the October woods? Isn't it lovely to be alive in October? Just to be alive, even if you are not worth a million dollars and are not surrounded by every luxury wealth can furnish? So let us be happy in Nature's riot of Autumn color.

Now to the work in hand, and the first letter is from Charlotte and Edith of far away Fair Haven, Wash'n. who ask if it is proper to call a man by his first name after he is married. Certainly, if that has been the custom before. (2) Nothing can be done very successfully with a jealous man except to drown him, or put him in boiling oil over night.

Mamie, Piney Point, Md.—Young ladies of twenty-seven do not wear their hair curled down their backs as a rule, though there is no positive law against it.

I. S., Lake Park, Minn.—The address of the Journal you seek is New York.

Rosy Posy, De Funiak Springs, Fla.—The young man will let you precede him into the parlor. (2) Girls of sixteen should not have beaus, nor should they exchange photographs with men. (3) Say anything you want to. (4) Watch the best dancers to see how a young man should hold a lady in the waltz. Some men don't seem to be able ever to learn how.

Ruth, Hearne, Texas—Consult your family physician. (2) Naturally rough hair will not become smooth and glossy. Any druggist will give you a good preparation for the hair, and careful brushing with a soft brush will do the rest.

Flora Silver, Pineville, Tenn.—Hypnotism is a peculiar power exercised by one will over another, and is not yet thoroughly investigated and known. It has no such effect as you ask about that I ever heard of. (2) As to the young man's and your infatuation for each other, it may be a case of real love, but as I see it now, I think you had better wait a year or two and see what effect time will have on it. People may be awfully silly sometimes.

Peachie, Verona, Ky.—All your questions have been answered time and time again in this column.

Mabel, Bellville, Texas—Yes, you may ask the gentleman for a handkerchief if you have none, but it is better to have one of your own. (2) Certainly, an important question may be answered by a note.

Mabelle, Toronto, Ont.—Yours is a plain case. Marry the man you love, and let your parents have the other one, if they want him.

Blue Eyes, Rivers, Me.—No, and you know it. (2) A girl may give a young man her "name card," but don't call it that. "Card" is enough. (3) A girl's mother should be the very first one to know of her love affairs, always.

K. M., Oshkosh, Wis.—Certainly, a girl should not ride with a man to whom she has not been formally introduced, unless he is her groom. (2) If it is the custom in Oshkosh for young women to reward their escorts by kissing them good night, then it is the correct thing to do. It is not so in most places.

Cora, Topeka, Kans.—One attending the graduating exercises of a very intimate friend has nothing to do except to look on and be glad.

Pansie, Whitewater, Wis.—You are too young to be asking about beaus, and don't bother about the tan, either. It is fashionable at this season.

Rex Alta, Hyde Park, Ark.—Rag Time songs are all right, but hardly classic. (2) You may ask a man to call, even though some other young man is expected, but let him know, as he may want to see you alone.

Old Subscriber, Kilbourne, Ill.—There is no sale for such a paper as you mention. (2) I know of no reliable firm that gives home employment to girls, except in the cities where they live and work with the needle.

I. M. T., Bodge, Mo.—Face massaging is to be learned like any other skilled labor, and it cannot be taught in this column.

Lizzie, Staplehurst, Neb.—"A engagement ring" should cost as much as the young man can afford to pay. But why not say "an engagement ring?" (2) Engaged girls do not usually ask their fiances for watches, but you might try once.

Evelyn, Chillicothe, Ohio.—You may ask a married man to hitch up your horse for you, and you may ask a young man to take you anywhere, but be pretty sure of him before you do, for some of them rather resent such requests. (2) On entering a company uninvited it is well to say: "Do I intrude?" or "May I join your party?"

H. H., Bartlett, N. H.—It looks hard to make the young man suffer for what he is not to blame for. Still if you marry him, his "bad" relatives will always be a shame to you, and still more to your children, if you should have any. Notwithstanding, your married life might be an ideal one as far as you two were concerned. Marry him and move far away from the shadow.

N. M. M., Missoula, Mon.—Get rid of the drunken one honorably, and in due time take the gentleman. You are under no obligation to make a wreck of your whole life.

D. A. J., Round Valley, Cal.—There is no harm in going with your sister-in-law's brother, but you and he are each five years too young to even think about marrying. The only harm in it is the chance of your becoming silly.

Brown Eyes, Port Matilda, Md.—Really, my dear, I don't know what a young man means when he calls a girl pretty and is attentive to her. Suppose you wait five or six years, and you will be older and know more. (2) At present you are old enough to know that you should not go wheeling with a young man to whom your parents object.

Blue Eyes, Kansas City, Mo.—Girls should not go into society before they leave school, and they should not leave school before they are twenty. That is not the rule, but it ought to be. (2) Don't stop in at the young man's office or place of business under any circumstances, unless he is engaged in some place where it is customary for parties of visitors to come sight-seeing.

There, my dears, your questions are all answered, and when we meet again the odor of Thanksgiving turkey will be in the air, and may we come to November with our hearts filled with thanks for all the blessings we have received, or the afflictions that we have missed. By by, and the Lord be with you till we meet again.

DRINK HABIT CURED

Mrs. May Hawkins Will Help Every Woman Save a Drunkard.

A Trial Package of Her Marvelous Home Treatment FREE for the asking.

Any true woman might well be proud to have saved one poor soul from the shackles of drink, but Mrs. Hawkins has redeemed thousands by her noble and practical work among those who have been victims of intemperance. Mrs. Hawkins for years suffered the grief and anguish shared by so many true and faithful women of America to-day, who have drink-afflicted fathers, husbands or sons. She determined to overcome this fearful evil if possible. Her search for a harmless, perfect and secret home cure was at last rewarded when an old friend came to her and gave her a remedy which had never been known to fail. Mrs. Hawkins gave the remedy secretly and in a few weeks, to her great joy, her dearest relative was entirely cured of appetite for drink and was again restored to health and manhood.

After this wonderful result Mrs. Hawkins decided to devote her life to the work of helping her sisters everywhere, whom she found suffering as she had suffered from the effects of alcohol upon a husband, father or son. With the assistance of others she perfected the original treatment and now offers to send this treatment free to any distressed wife, mother or sister who will write for it. Mrs. Hawkins' great desire is that every woman who needs this medicine will write at once to her and get it.

A Grateful Woman.

MRS. MAY HAWKINS, Grand Rapids, Mich.—My Dear Friend: You have been the means of bringing sunshine into my home. Last August I got your remedy and began giving it to my husband, and from that time until the present he has not taken a drop of any kind of alcoholic drinks. I cannot say too much for what your remedy has done for me and I urge it as a helper to any mother, sister or wife who shall need it. Yours sincerely, MRS. H. A. LANE.

East Hampton, Me., Feb. 14, 1899.

Thousands have saved their homes and loved ones by this remedy and you can be among the number if you only wish it. Mrs. Hawkins treats every letter she receives sacredly confidential and you need have no hesitancy whatever in writing her for assistance. Do not delay; write her to-day. Address

CONDUCTED BY REGULUS.

THE Lunation or new moon to which we look for indications as to National affairs for the month is the one that occurs at about 20 minutes past 8 o'clock in the morning of the 23rd of October, Washington time.

At the moment of that new moon Mercury will be just rising on the ascending horizon; the conjoined luminaries will be in the eastern heavens on the cusp of the 12th house; Venus will be on the mid-heaven; Mars, past the meridian, in the 9th house; Saturn in the 2d house, and Herschel and Jupiter conjoined in the Ascendant.

The indications of the figure bear out the general good promises of former figures for the steady progress and permanent welfare of the Nation. The benefics occupy the important angles of the figure, showing marked predominance of good over evil and the conjoined luminaries themselves have the best rays of the superior planets Saturn and Neptune and suffer no affliction from any of the planetary bodies. There are some minor indications of drawbacks and hindrances. Saturn in the 2d, points to heavy drainage of the Nation's revenue; Mars in the 9th indicates vigorous and aggressive action of the government in defending the commercial rights of our country in the markets of the world. Saturn's position points to some underhanded action or efforts of foreign interests to our detriment in a commercial sense but the watchfulness and vigor of our government saves our advantages and continues the Nation among the progressive ones of the world.

CELESTIAL CALENDAR FOR NOVEMBER, 1900.

NOVEMBER. 1—Thursday. This day is particularly favorable for dealings in real estate and for all manner of contracts looking to its improvement and for all agricultural undertakings. Deal in lumber, metals, wool, mining ores, coal, lead, and grain and make engagements with the laboring classes of men.

2—Friday. Make personal applications to public officials and persons in authority for favor or advantage, during the forenoon; but after the noon hour baffling and disappointing conditions arise which promise very unfavorably for the launching of any new undertaking, especially if it is concerned with money or with banking interests; do not make purchases of a speculative character and keep an eye to the purse for avoidance of waste.

3—Saturday. A day of very indifferent promise when thou shouldst not ask favor of superior or persons in authority or public officers; the afternoon gives many petty annoyances and disappointments; do not expect pleasure from social or musical entertainments and dramatic engagements will be less satisfactory than usual; see that no mistakes are made in the taking of medicines; poisonous drugs should be used with unusual caution. The fair sex will be seriously antagonized in these passing days and sorrows and disappointments to them will be fruitful in mischief; let them beware of any matrimonial contract at this time, especially if born about the 23rd of March, June, September or December, of past years. Theatrical managers will do well to avoid this time for making any new engagements in their professions and ought not to be surprised if their affairs meet hindrances and disappointments or they suffer losses in their business, especially if born about the dates given above.

4—Sunday. One of the best Sabbaths of the month, especially so for the good and prosperity of church matters and for religious and moral improvement; the afternoon conduces particularly to very happy pulpit efforts, giving unusual eloquence and zeal to the extemporaneous speaker and closer attention and more ready comprehension and conviction to the listener.

5—Monday. An excellent day; bargain for lands and houses; make contracts for their improvement and deal with the agricultural classes and mechanics; surgical operations and chemical experiments generally succeed; consult thy dentist; travel and trade in cattle, machinery, hardware and cutlery, especially in the forenoon hours.

6—Tuesday. Be not rash in word or deed in this day, nor have dealings with mechanics, dentists, or surgeons; see that no offence is given by thee to thine employer nor expect favor from public officials or persons of prominence in large manufacturing concerns; make no beginning in matters of consequence; keep out of controversy of all kinds, especially if born about the 5th of February, 4th of May, 9th of August, or 6th of November, of past years.

7—Wednesday. Keep thy tongue under restraint during the early hours of the forenoon; nor be rash in decision in business engagements; quarrels and contentions are easy of birth and more violence of passion abounds at this time than usual; the afternoon is the best part of the day.

8—Thursday. Let all engaged in the literary walks of life rest quietly during this day; the time will develop much fraud and deception; sign no papers of consequence and give no credit without closest scrutiny; do no important correspondence nor hire or purchase lands or houses, and postpone transacting business with lawyers; the noon hour is the best hour, but better permanent headway may be made by saving and repairing the nervous energies at this time and running no risk. This is particularly true of persons born about the 23rd of February, 28th of May, 25th of August, or 6th of December, of past years. Such nativities are injuriously affected for a short season and strange mental troubles and anxieties are indicated for a majority of such persons. Nervous diseases generally will be aggravated and neuralgic annoyances are likely to prove more than usually troublesome; do not use this day for any engagement pertaining to trademarks, copyrights, patents, or any of the novelties of life; beware of speculation and be watchful of the purse.

9—Friday. This day is conducive to business activity and enterprise, particularly encouraging dealings in cattle and metals; the mechanical trades are favored and manufacturing interests should be pushed vigorously; deal in drugs, chemicals, hardware, cutlery and electrical goods of all kinds.

10—Saturday. A day greatly to be avoided for wooing or wedding; the conditions are treacherous and evil and likely to prove very unfortunate to the persons contracting any matrimonial engagement at this time; have no dealings with thy landlord nor plan or execute any matter improving real estate; do not make any engagement with builders, farmers, plumbers, painters, decorators nor dealers in house-furnishing goods; the landscape artists have been much under affliction for the past week or ten days and their enterprises should not be productive of satisfaction.

11—Sunday. Peculiar features of religious doctrine are disclosed on this day by the extemporaneous preacher and the day will prove fruitful of strange experiences.

12—Monday. Rise early and push thy business; pursue literary avocations and those connected with the polite arts; drive thy correspondence and sign deeds and writings in the middle hours of the day.

13—Tuesday. Commercial men will find the first part of this day favorable for making purchases of goods for trade and for transactions of a money character, especially dealings with banks and persons of wealth; travel and have pleasures in the evening.

14—Wednesday. With a healthy check upon the sudden impulses and hasty action, in the forenoon, this day should be vigorously employed for forwarding all honorable enterprises, particularly if concerned with real estate or its improvement; correspondence in the late hours is best postponed.

15—Thursday. This day bids thee buy not, nor canst thou expect much advantage from money dealers or dealings; do not indulge thy tastes or purchase mere gratifications as the conditions prompt extravagance and selfish indulgences; do not seek favor nor expect advantage from thy transactions with government bodies or large corporate interests.

17—Saturday. The forenoon hours somewhat embarrass business transactions, though matters of a literary character are less interfered with than most others.

18—Sunday. One of the promising Sabbath days of the month particularly conducive to the success of religious efforts and contributing physical vitality, strength, and buoyancy of spirit; a very fortunate birthday anniversary, promising good health conditions and prosperity for many months to come; it is peculiarly promising of happiness to persons born about this day, in past years, who are now contemplating marriage or engagements looking in that direction.

19—Monday. Employ every moment of this day pushing business to the utmost; transact business with surgeons, chemists, machinists and all the mechanical classes; have surgical operations performed, trade in cattle and metals, be astir for transactions with landlords and dealings with contractors, plumbers, and aged persons.

20—Tuesday. Push sales and business generally, though be not too ready to sign writings or make engagements without deliberately weighing consequences. Give attention to business concerned with great manufacturing enterprises, mechanical engineering, or electrical ventures.

21—Wednesday. Use this day vigorously for commercial ventures pertaining to literary pursuits; urge all studies and the literary avocations, journey and attend to business with lawyers, merchants, printers, publishers, and all ingenious persons: literary efforts will be crowned with success; do all important correspondence, engage help and attend to educational matters.

22—Thursday. An unpromising day; give employer a wide berth and no cause for dissatisfaction of this day; keep a civil tongue; be slow to take offence, avoid all controversy and those claiming it for an anniversary should take due precautions during the next few months to avoid exposing themselves unnecessarily to danger of accident and against the doing of those things which contribute to liver, lung, bowel, and all classes of inflammatory or eruptive troubles. The same is in some measure true of persons born about the 18th of February, 21st of May, or 23rd of August, of past years; and more than the ordinary care ought to be exercised by such persons for avoidance of fevers and hurts, nor should they be too aggressive or contentious in their business surroundings. Male relatives of such persons are likely to be experiencing adverse conditions.

23—Friday. This day is a vast improvement over the preceding and the middle hours should be fully employed in the major undertakings of life; especially such as concern money matters or dealings with the wealthy; buy goods for trade, and crowd all honorable enterprises.

24—Saturday. Push business diligently especially such as concerns the elegant in life and all the classes of mechanical work, manufacturing, and electrical ventures; deal in fancy goods, dress materials, jewelry and articles of adornment. Social, musical and dramatical matters have favoring conditions, and the fair sex will incline toward entertainment and recreation.

25—Sunday. An inferior day, prompting quiet rather than exertion; put a bridle upon the tongue in the evening.

26—Monday. Improve the first two-thirds of the day for literary labors and commercial engagements as to literary productions; the elegant pursuits meet adverse conditions as this day advances, when dealings in artistic goods, wearing apparel, musical merchandise, and articles which gratify and please mankind are not favored or do not yield profitable results; do not have social entertainments in the evening, nor expect satisfaction from the drama.

27—Tuesday. During this day applications to employers and persons in authority in either private or public positions are likely to meet with very favorable consideration. Deal with government officers, railway officials, and persons of political prominence.

28—Wednesday. Seek money accommodations in the early forenoon, but be in no haste to do business with persons in the literary callings; sign no deeds; do no writing in matters of magnitude, nor concern thyself with educational projects; the afternoon and evening favor the elegant and social matters, and pleasure seeking of temperate character will be unusually agreeable.

29—Thursday. Avoid dealings with public officials; give no offence to thine employer; expect no favor from banks or monied institutions and avoid very aged and eccentric persons in life.

30—Friday. Be watchful of the purse in the early forenoon, when no purchases should be made of a speculative character; the literary and educational ventures ought to be pushed to the utmost on this day.

PERFECT MANHOOD

Prof. Jules Laborde's Marvelous French Preparation of

"CALTHOS"

For Lost Manhood.

Full 5 Days' Treatment SENT FREE

By Sealed Mail.

NO C. O. D. OR DEPOSIT SCHEME.

Every person who is a sufferer from nervous diseases should write the Von Mohl Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, at once, and accept their offer of a five days' trial treatment free of charge. This is no C. O. D. or DEPOSIT scheme but a liberal proposition made to unfortunate sufferers by this long-established concern, which is the largest importer of specifics for nervous and sexual diseases in the world.

The Von Mohl Co. has the sole American rights for Prof. Laborde's French preparation of "Calthos," the only remedy known to advanced medical science that will positively cure nervous debility. This remedy has for years been used as a specific in the French and German armies, and since its introduction into the United States has cured many thousands of sufferers, and the remarkable success of the remedy in Europe has been repeated in this country.

In order to place this wonderful treatment in the hands of every person who suffers the mental and physical anguish of sexual weakness, The Von Mohl Co., has decided to send a free trial treatment to all who write at once. The remedy is sent by mail in a plain package, and there is no publicity in receiving it or taking it. Accompanying the medicine there is a full treatise in plain language for you to read. Take the medicine privately with perfect safety, and a sure cure is guaranteed.

Lost vitality creeps upon men unawares. Do not deceive yourself or remain in ignorance while you are being dragged down by this insidious disease. No matter what the cause may be, whether early abuses, excesses or overwork and business cares, the results are the same—premature loss of strength and memory, emissions, impotency, varicocele and shrunken parts. This specific remedy will cure you at any stage before epilepsy results, with ensuing consumption and insanity. "Calthos" goes directly to the seat of the trouble, no matter of how long standing, and the patient feels the benefit of the first day's treatment. In five days the medicines sent free will make you feel like a new man.

The Von Mohl Co. often receives the most astonishing testimonials from persons who have taken only five days' treatment. They have thousands of testimonials from those who have been permanently cured after having been given up by doctors, misled and ruined in health by disreputable medical schemers, and when they had given up their last hope for health and happiness. No sensible person will permit his name to be used for a testimonial as an admission that he had any of the diseases for which the preparation of "Calthos" is a specific cure. Some irresponsible advertisers are using "made-up" testimonials, but the Von Mohl Co. invariably declines to make public the names or correspondence of any patients who have been cured by "Calthos."

Five days' treatment will be placed in your hands free of cost, and you are earnestly urged for your own sake to send for it without delay. Write to day and send your address. It is not necessary to give embarrassing details of your symptons. The book accompanying the five days' treatment will enable you to take the medicine in private and treat yourself successfully at home. It costs nothing to try this remedy. It may cost you a great deal more to let this offer go by. Write today. Address THE VON MOHL CO. 857 B, CINCINNATI, OHIO. Largest Importers of Standard Preparations in the United States.
